SIR HENRY ASHURST, Bart.

SIR,

THE minifters of the gofpel are, in the fcripturelanguage, Stars in the right hand of Chrift, to fignify their diffusive light, and bencficial influences. As in the future state of the refurrection, some Stars fhall differ from others in glory; fo in the prefent ftate of the regeneration, fome ministers are diffinguished from others, by a brighter eminence in their endowments, and a more powerful emanation of light in their preaching. Of this felect number was Mr Philip Henry, in whom there was a union of those real excellencies of parts, learning, and divine graces, that fignalized him among his brethren. This does evidently appear in the narrative of his life, drawn by one very fit to do it : as having had entire knowledge of him, by long and intimate converfation; and having, by his holy inftructions, and the impreffion of his example, been made partaker of the fame fanctifying Spirit. The defcribing the external actions of faints, without obferving the holy principles and affections from whence they derived their life and purity, is a defective and irregular representation of them. 'Tis as if an account were given of the riches and fœcundity of the earth, from the flowers and fruits that grow upon it, without confidering the mines of precious metals contained in its bofom. Now only an inward christian that has felt the power of religion in his heart, can, from the reflection upon himfelf, and his uncounterfeit experience, difcover the operations of grace in the breafts of others.

Mr Henry was dedicated to the fervice of Chrift by his mother in his tender age. His first love and defires (when he was capable to make a judicious choice) were fet upon God. He entered early into the miniftry, and confecrated all the powers of his foul, underftanding, memory, will, and affections, with his time and and ftrength, to the fervice of Chrift. And fuch was the grace and favour of God to him, that he loft no days in his flourishing age, by fatisfying the voluptuous appetites; nor in his declining age by difeafes and infirmities, but inceffantly applied himfelf to his fpirit-He was called to a private place in Wales, ual work. but his fhining worth could not be fhaded in a corner. A confluence of people from other parts attended on his ministry. Indeed the word of truth that dies in the mouths of the cold and carelefs, (for they are not all faints that ferve in the fanctuary) had life and fpirit in his preaching; for it proceeded from a heart burning with zeal for the honour of Chrift and falva-Accordingly he fuited his difcourfes to tion of fouls. the wife and the weak; and imitated the prophet, who contracted his ftature to the dead body of the widow's fon, applying his mouth to the mouth of the child, to infpire the breath of life into him. The poor and defpifed were inftructed by him, with the fame compaffionate love and diligence as the rich, notwithftanding the civil diffinction of perfons, which will fhortly vanith for ever; for he confidered their fouls were of the fame precious and immortal value. In the adminiftration of the Lord's, Supper, he exprest the just temperament of fweetnefs and feverity : with melting compaffion he invited all relenting and returning finners to come to Chrift, and receive their pardon fealed with his blood : but he was fo jealous of the honour of Chrift, that he deterred, by the most fearful confequences, the rebellious that indulged their lufts, from coming to partake of the feaft of the unfpotted Lamb. He was not allured by temporal advantage (which is the mark of a mercenary) to leave the first place, where by the divine difpofal he was feated.

When the fatal Bartholomew-day came, though he had fair hopes of preferment, by his attendance upon the King and Duke of York, in their early age, of which the remembrance might have been revived; yet he was guided by a fuperior fpirit, and imitated the felf-felf-denial of Mofes (a duty little underftood, and lefs practifed, by the earthly-minded) "rather choosing to "fuffer affliction with the people of God, than to en-"joy the good things of this world." As the light of heaven, when the air is flormy and diffurbed, does not lofe the rectitude of its rays; to his enlightened confcience did not bend in compliance with the terms of conformity, but he obeyed its fincere judgment.

After his being expelled from the place of his publick miniftry, his deportment was becoming a fon of peace. He refufed not communion with the church of England, in the ordinances of the gofpel, to far as his confcience permitted. Yet he could not defert the duty of his office, to which he was, with facred folemnity fet apart. He was faithful to improve opportunities for ferving the intereft of fouls, notwith/tanding the feverities inflicted on him. And after the reftoring ourfreedom of preaching, he continued in the performance of his delightful work, till death put a period to his labours.

After this account of him as a minister of Christ, I will glance upon his carriage as a chriftian. His converfation was fo holy and regular, fo free from taint, that he was unacculable by his enemies : they could only object his nonconformity as a crime. But his vigilant and tender confcience difcovered the fpots of fin in himfelf, which fo affected his foul, that he defired repentance might accompany him to the gate of heaven: an excellent tellimony of humility, the infeparable character of a faint. His love to God was fupreme, which was declared by his chosen hours of communion with him every day. The union of affections is naturally productive of union in conversation. Accordingly our Saviour promifes, "He that loveth me, shall " be loved of my Father; and I will love him, and " will manifest myself to him :" and he repeats the promife, " If a man love me, he will keep my words: " and my Father will love him, and we will come to " him, and make our abode whith him." To his fpecial cial and fingular love to God, was joined a univerfal love to men: he did good to all according to his ability. His forgiving of injuries, that rare and difficult duty, was eminently confpicuous in the fharpeft provocations. When he could not excufe the offence, he would pardon the offender, and ftrive to imitate the perfect model of charity exprest in our fuffering Saviour, who, in the extremity of his fufferings, when refentments are molt quick and fenfible, prayed for his cruel perfecutors. His filial truft in God was correspondent to God's fatherly providence to him. This was his fupport in times of trial, and maintained an equal temper in his mind, and tenor in his conversation. In short, he led a life of evangelical perfection, most worthy to be honourably preferved in the memory of future times. The following narrative of it, if read with an obferving eye, how instructive and affecting will it be to ministers, and apt to transform them into his likenefs!

Thus, Sir, I have given a flort view of the life of that man, for whom you had fuch a high veneration and dear love. It argues a clearer fpirit and a diviner temper than is ufual in perfons of confpicuous quality, when holinefs is fo defpicably mean in the effeem of carnal men, to value it above all titles and treafures, and the perifhing pride of this world. I am perfwaded it will be very pleafing to you, that your name and excellent Mr Henry's, are joined in the fame papers.

I am,

SIR,

Your very humble and faithful fervant,

WILLIAM BATES.

THAT which we aim at in this undertaking, and which we would fet before us, at our entrance upon it is, not fo much to embalm the memory of this good man (though that alfo is bleffed) as to exhibit to the world a pattern of that primitive chriftianity, which all that knew him well, obferved to be exemplified in him, while he lived; and when they faw the end of his converfation, as it were with one confent. defired a public and lafting account of, or rather demanded it, as a just debt owing to the world, by those into whose hands his papers came, as judging fuch an account likely to conduce much to the glory of God's grace, and to the edification of many, especially of those that were acquainted with He was one whom the Divine Providence did not call him. out (as neither did his own inclination lead him) to any very public fcene of action: he was none of the forward men of the age, that make themfelves talked of : the world fcarce knew that there was fuch a man in it. But in his low and narrow fphere he was a burning and fhining light, and therefore we think his pious example is the more adapted to general ufe, efpecially confifting not in the extafies and raptures of zeal and devotion, which are looked upon rather as admirable than imitable; but in the long feries of an even, regular, prudent, and well-ordered conversation, which he had in the world, and in the ordinary bufinefs of it, with fimplicity and godly funcerity; not with flefhly wildom, but by the grace of God.

It hath been faid, that quiet and peaceable reigns, though they are the beft to live in, yet they are the worft to write of, as yielding leaft variety of matter for the hiftorian's pen to work upon : but a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlinefs and honefty, being the fum and fubftance of practical chriftianity, the recommending of the example of fuch a life, in the common and familiar inftances of it; together with the kind and gracious providences of God attending it, may be, if not as diverting to the curious, yet every whit as ufeful and inftructive to the pious readers.

If any fuggeft, that the defign of this attempt is to credit and advance a party, let them know, that Mr Henry was a man of no party, but true catholick chriftianity (not debauched by bigotry, nor leavened by any private opinions or interefts) was his very temper and genius,

Preface.

According to the excellent and royal laws of this holy religion, his life was led with a firict and confcientious adherence to truth and equity; a great tendernefs and inoffenfivenefs to all maakind; and a mighty tincture of fincere piety and devotednefs to God: and according to those facred rules we fhall endeavour, in juffice to him, as well as to our reader, to reprefent him in the following account; and if any thing fhould drop from our pen; which might juftly give offence to any, (which we promife industriously to avoid,) we defire it may be looked upon as a falle ftroke; and fo far not truly reprefenting him, who was fo blamelefs and harmlefs, and without rebuke.

Much of our materials for this ftructure we have out of his own papers, (effectally his diary,) for by them his picture may be drawn neareft to the life, and from thence we may take the trueft idea of him, and of the foirit he was of. Those notes being intended for his own private use in the review, and never communicated to any perfon whatfoever; and appearing here (as they ought to do) in their own native drefs, the candid reader will excufe it, if fometimes the expressions fhould feem abrupt ; they are the genuine, unforced, an i unftudied breathings of a gracious foul; and we hope will be rather the more acceptable to those, who, through grace, are confcious to themfelves of the fame devout and pious motions; for as in water face anfwers to face, fo doth one fanctified and renewed foul to another; and (as Mr Baxter obferves in his Preface to Mr Clark's Lives) God's graces are much the tame in all his holy ones; and therefore we muft not think that fuch inftances as thefe are extraordinary rarities; but God hath in wonderful mercy raifed up many, by whofe graces even this earth is perfumed and enlightened. But if one ftar be allowed to differ from another ftar in glory; perhaps our reader will fay, when he hath gone through the following account, that Mr Henry may be ranked among those of the firit magnitude.

CHAP. I.

Mr Philip Henry's Birth, Parentage, early Piety, and Education at School.

TE was born at Whitehall, in Westminster, on Wednesday 24th August 1631, being Bartholomew-day. I find ufually, in his diary, fome pious remark or other upon the annual return of his birthday: as in one year he notes, that the Scripture mentions but two who obferved their birth-day with feafting and joy, and they were neither of them copies to be written after, viz. Pharaoh, Gen. xl. 20. and Herod, Mat. xiv. 6. " But (faith he) I rather ob-" ferve it as a day of mourning and humiliation, be-" caufe fhapen in iniquity, and conceived in fin." And when he had compleated the thirtieth year of his age, he noted this, " So old, and no older, Alex-" ander was when he had conquered the great world; " but (faith he) I have not yet fubdued the little " world, myself." At his thirty-third year he hath this humble reflection; " A long time lived to fmall " purpofe, What fhall I do to redeem it?" And at another, " I may mourn as Cæfar did when he reflec-" ted upon Alexander's early atchievements, that " others, younger than I am, have done much more A than than I have done for God, the God of my life." And (to mention no more) when he had lived forty-two years, he thus writes; "I would be loth to live it " over again, left, inftead of making it better, I fhould " make it worfe; and befides, every year and day " fpent on earth is loft in heaven." This laft note minds me of a paffage I have heard him tell of a friend of his, who being grown into years, was afked how old he was, and anfwer'd, On the wrong fide of fifty: which (faid Mr Henry) he fhould not have faid; for if he was going to heaven, it was the right fide of fifty.

He always kept a will by him ready made; and it was his cultom yearly, upon the return of his birthday, to review, and (if occafion were) to renew and alter it: for it is good to do that at a fet time, which it is very good to do at fome time. The laft will he made bears date, " This 2.4th day of Auguft 1695, " being the day of the year on which I was born " 1631, and alfo the day of the year on which by law " I died, as did alfo near two thoufand faithful mini-" fters of Jefus Chrift, 1662;" alluding to that claufe in the Act of Uniformity, which difpofeth of the places and benefices of minifters not conforming, as if they were naturally dead.

His father's name was John Henry, the fon of Henry Williams of Britton's Ferry, betwixt Neath and Swanfey, in Glamorganfhire. According to the old Welfh cuftom, (fome fay conformable to that of the ancient Hebrews, but now almost in all places laid afide,) the father's Chriftian name was the fon's firname. He had left his native country, and his father's houfe very young, unprovided for by his relations; but it pleafed God to blefs his ingenuity and induftry with a confiderable income afterwards, which enabled him to live comfortably himfelf, to bring up his children well, and to be kind to many of his relations; but public events making againft him at his latter end, when he died he left little behind him for his children, but but God gracioufly took care of them. Providence brought this Mr John Henry, when he was young, to be the Earl of Pembroke's gentleman, whom he ferved many years : the Earl, coming to be Lord Chamberlain, preferred him to be the King's fervant : he was first made keeper of the orchard at Whitehall, and afterwards page of the back flairs to the King's fecond fon, James Duke of York, which place obliged him to a perfonal attendance upon the Duke in his chamber. He lived and died a courtier, a hearty mourner for his royal master King Charles the First, whom he did not long furvive. He continued, during all the wartime, in his houfe at Whitehall, though the profits of his places ceafed. The King paffing by his door, under a guard, to take water, when he was going to Westminster, to that which they call'd his trial, inquired for his old fervant, Mr John Henry, who was ready to pay his due refpects to him, and prayed God to blefs his Majesty, and to deliver him out of the hands of his enemies, for which the guard had like to have been rough upon him.

His mother was Mrs Magdalen Rochdale, of the parish of St Martins-in-the-Fields, in Westminster. She was a virtuous, pious gentlewoman, and one that feared God above many: fhe was altogether dead to the vanities and pleafures of the court, though the lived in the midfl of them. She looked well to the ways of her household ; prayed with them daily, catechized her children, and taught them the good knowledge of the Lord betimes. I have heard him fpeak of his learning Mr Perkins his fix principles when he was very young ; and he often mentioned, with thankfulnefs to God, his great happinefs in having fuch a mother, who was to him as Lois and Eunice were to Timothy, acquainting him with the fcriptures from his childhood; and there appearing in him early inclinations both to learning and piety, fhe devoted him in his tender years to the fervice of God in the work of the miniftry. She died of a confumption 6th March 1645, leaving  $A_2$ leaving behind her only this fon and five daughters. A little before fhe died, fhe had this faying, " My " head is in heaven, and my heart is in heaven; it is " but one ftep more, and I fhall be there too."

His fufceptors in baptifm were Philip Earl of Pembroke (who gave him his name, and was kind to him as long as he lived, as was alfo his fon Philip after him) James Earl of Carlifle, and the Countefs of Salifbury.

Prince Charles and the Duke of York being fomewhat near of an age to him, he was in his childhood very much an attendant upon them in their play, and they were often with him at his father's houfe, and were wont to tell him what preferment he fhould have at court, as foon as he was fit for it. He kept a book to his dying day, which the Duke of York gave him : and I have heard him bewail the lofs of two curious pictures, which he gave him likewife. Archbifhop Laud took a particular kindnefs to him when he was a child, becaufe he would be very officious to attend at the water-gate (which was part of his father's charge in Whitehall) to let the Archbifhop through when he came late from council, to crofs the water to Lambeth.

These circumstances of his childhood he would fometimes fpeak of among his friends, not as glorying in them, but taking occasion from thence to blefs God for his deliverance from the fnares of the court, in the midft of which it is fo very hard to maintain a good conficience and the power of religion, that it hath been faid (though bleffed be God, it is not a rule without exception) Exeat ex aulo qui velit effe pius. The breaking up and fcattering of the court, by the calamities of 1641, as it dashed the expectations of his court-preferments, fo it prevented the danger of court-entanglements; and though it was not, like Mofes's, a choice of his own, when come to years, to quit the court; vet when he was come to years, he always expressed a great fatisfaction in his removal from it, and bleffed God, who chofe his inheritance fo much the better for him.

Yet it may not be improper to obferve here what was obvious, as well as amiable to all who convers'd with him; viz. that he had the most fweet and obliging air of courtefy and civility that could be; which fome attributed in part to his early education at court. His mien and carriage was always fo very decent and respectful, that it could not but win the hearts of all he had to do with. Never was any man further from that rudenefs and morofenefs which fome fcholars, and too many that profess religion, either wilfully affect, er carelefly allow themfelves in, fometimes to the reproach of their profession. 'Tis one of the laws of our holy religion, exemplified in the conversation of this good man, to honour all men. Sanctify'd civility is a great ornament to christianity. It was a faying he often ufed, " Religion doth not deftroy good manners;" and yet he was very far from any thing of vanity in apparel, or formality of compliment in addrefs; but his converfation was all natural and eafy to himfelf and others, and nothing appeared in him which even a fevere cri-tick could juftly call affected. This temper of his tended very much to the adorning of the doctrine of God our Saviour; and the general transcript of fuch an excellent copy would do much towards the healing of those wounds which religion had received in the house of her friends by the contrary. But to return to his ftory :----

The first Latin school he went to was at St Martins' church, under the teaching of a Mr Bonner. Afterwards he was removed to Battersey, where a Mr Wells was his school-master. The grateful mention which in some of his papers he makes of these that were the guides and instructors of his childhood and youth, brings to mind that French proverb to this purpose: "To father, teacher, and God all-fufficient, " none can render equivalent."

But in the year 1643, when he was about twelve years old, he was admitted into Westminster-school, in the fourth form, under Mr Thomas Vincent, then used. ufher, whom he would often fpeak of, as a most able, diligent fchool-master; and one who grieved fo much at the dullnefs and non-proficiency of any of his fcholars, that, falling into a confumption, I have heard Mr Henry fay of him, That he even killed himself with false Latin.

A while after, he was taken into the upper fchool, under Mr Richard Bufby (afterwards Dr Bufby) and in October 1645 he was admitted King's fcholar, and was first of the election, partly by his own merit, and partly by the interest of the Earl of Pembroke.

Here he profited greatly in fchool-learning, and all his days retained his improvements therein to admiration. When he was in years, he would readily, in difcourfe, quote paffages out of the claffick authors that were not common, and had them ad unguem, and yet rarely us'd any fuch things in his preaching, (tho' fometimes, if very appofite, he inferted them in his notes.) He was very ready and exact in the Greek accents, the quantities of words, and all the feveral kinds of Latin verfe ; and often prefied it upon young fcholars, in the midft of their univerfity - learning, not to forget their fchool authors.

Here and before, his ufual recreation at vacant times was, either reading the printed accounts of publick occurrences, or attending the courts at Weftminfterhall, to hear the trials and arguments there, which I have heard him fay, he hath often done to the lofs of his dinner, and oftner of his play.

But paulo majora canamus—Soon after thofe unhappy wars begun, there was a daily morning-lecture fet up at the Abby-Church, between fix and eight of the clock, and preached by feven worthy members of the Affembly of Divines in courfe, viz. Mr Marthal, Mr Palmer, Mr Herl, Dr Staunton, Mr Nye, Mr Whitaker, and Mr Hill. It was the requeft of his pious mother to Mr Bufby, that he would give her fon leave to attend that lecture daily; which he did, not abating any thing of his fchool exercife, in which he kept pace with the reft; but only difpenfing with his ab-abfence for that hour: and the Lord was pleafed to make good impreflions on his foul, by the fermons he heard there. His mother also took him with her every Thurfday to Mr Cafe's lecture at St Martins. On the Lord's days he fat under the powerful miniftry of Mr Stephen Marshall, in the morning, at New-Chapel; in the afternoon at St Margarets, Westminfter (which was their parifh church:) in the former place Mr Marshall preached long from Phil. ii. 5, 6, &c. in the latter, from John viii. 36. of our freedom by Chrift. This minister, and this ministry, he would, to his laft, fpeak of with great refpect, and thankfulnefs to God, as that by which he was, through grace, in the beginning of his days begotten again to a lively hope. I have heard him fpeak of it, as the faying of fome wife men at that time, That if all the Prefbyterians had been like Mr Steven Marshall, and all the Independents like Mr Jeremiah Burroughs, and all the Episcopal men like Archbishop Usher, the breaches of the church would foon have been heal'd. He alfo attended conftantly upon the monthly fafts at St Margarets, where the best and ablest ministers of England preached before the then Houfe of Commons; and the fervice of the day was carried on with great ftrictnefs and folemnity, form eight in the morning till four in the evening. It was his conftant practice, from eleven or twelve years old, to write (as he could) all the fermons he heard, which he kept very carefully, transcribed many of them fair over after, and notwithftanding his many removes, they are yet forthcoming.

At these monthly fasts (as he himself hath recorded it) he had often fweet meltings of foul in prayer, and confession of fin, (particularly once with special remark, when Mr William Bridge of Yarmouth prayed) and many warm and lively truths came home to his heart, and he daily increased in that wisdom and knowledge which is to falvation. Read his reflections upon this, which he wrote many years after :

" If ever any child (faith he) fuch as I then was, be-" tween the tenth and fifteenth years of my age, « enjoy'd line upon line, precept upon precept, I " did. And was it in vain? I truft not altogether in " vain. My foul rejoiceth and is glad at the remem-" brance of it; the word diftilled as the dew, and " dropt as the rain : I lov'd it and lov'd the meffen-" gers of it; their very feet were beautiful to me. " And, Lord, what a mercy was it, that, at a time " when the poor countries were laid wafte, when the " noife of drums and trumpets, and the clattering " of arms was heard there, and the way to Zion " mourn'd, that then my lot fhould be where there " was peace and quietnefs, where the voice of the " turtle was heard, and there was great plenty of " gofpel-opportunities ? Blefs the Lord, O my foul ! " as long as I live, I will blefs the Lord, I will praife " my God while I have my being. Had it been on-" ly the reffraint that it laid upon me, whereby I was " kept from the common fins of other children and " youths; fuch as curfing, fwearing, fabbath-break-" ing, and the like; I were bound to be very thank-" ful: but that it prevailed through grace effectually " to bring me to God, how much am I indebted, and " what fhall I render !"

Thus you fee how the dews of Heaven foftened his heart by degrees.—From thefe early experiences of his own.

1. He would blame those who laid fo much ftress on people's knowing the exact time of their converfion, which he thought was with many not possible to do. Who can fo foon be aware of the day-break, or of the fpringing up of the feed fown? The work of grace is better known in its effects than in its causes.

He would fometimes illustrate this by that faying of the blind man to the Pharifees, who were fo critical in examining the recovery of his fight: This and t'other I know not concerning it, but "this one thing I know, " that whereas I was blind, now I fee; John ix. 25."

2. He

2. He would bear his testimony to the comfort and benefit of early piety, and recommend it to all young people, as a good thing to bear the yoke of the Lord Jeius in youth. He would often witnefs against that wicked Proverb, " A young Saint, an old Devil;" and would have it faid rather, " A young Saint, an " old Angel." He obferved it concerning Obadiah (and he was a courtier) that he "feared the Lord " from his youth, I Kings xviii. 12.; and it is faid of him, ver. 3. that he "feared the Lord greatly." Thofe that would come to fear God greatly, mult learn to fear him from their youth. No man did his duty fo naturally as Timothy did (Phil. ii. 20.) who from a child knew the Holy Scriptures : he would fometimes apply to this that common faying, "He that would " thrive, must rife at five ;" and in dealing with young people, how earneftly would he prefs this upon them : I tell you, " You cannot begin too foon to be religi-" ous, but you may put it off too long." Manna muit be gathered early; and he that is the first, must have the first. He often inculcated Eccl. xii. 1. " Remem-" ber thy Creator in the days of thy youth," or, as in the original, " the days of thy choice :" thy choice days, and thy chufing days.

I remember a paffage of his in a lecture fermon, in the year 1674, which much affected many; he was preaching on that text, Matt. xi. 30. "My yoke is "eafy;" and after many things infifted upon, to prove the yoke of Chrift an eafy yoke, he at laft appealed to the experiences of all that had drawn in that yoke: "Call now, if there be any that will anfwer you, and "to which of the faints will you turn ?" turn to which you will, and they will all agree that they have found "wifdom's ways pleafantnefs," and "Chrift's com-"mandments not grievous : and (faith he) I will here "witnefs for one, who through grace have in fome "poor meafure been drawing in this yoke now above "thirty years, and I have found it an eafy yoke, and "like my choice too well to change."

3. IIe

3. He would also recommend it to the care of parents, to bring their children betimes to public ordinances. He would fay, that they are capable fooner than we are aware, of receiving good by them. The foripture takes notice more than once of the little ones in the folenn affemblies of the faithful, Deut. xxix. 11. Ezra x. 1. Acts xxi. 5. If we lay our children by the pool-fide, who knows but the bleffed Spirit may help them in, and heal them. He ufed to apply that foripture to this, Cant. i. 3. Those that would have communion with Chrift, must not only go forth by the footsteps of the flock themselves, but feed their kids too; their children or other young ones that are under their charge, " beside the Shepherd's tents."

4. He would also recommend to young people the practice of writing fermons. He himfelf did it, not only when he was young, but continued it conftantly till within a few years before he died, when the decay of his fight obliging him to the ufe of fpectacles, made writing not fo ready to him as it had been. He never wrote fhort-hand, but had an excellent art of taking the fubflance of a fermon in a very plain and legible hand, and with a great deal of eafe. And the fermons he wrote he kept by him, in fuch method and order, that by the help of indexes, which he made to them, he could readily turn almost to any fermon that ever he heard, where he noted the preacher, place, and time; and this he called " hearing for the time "to come." He recommended this practice to others, as a means to engage their attention in hearing, and to prevent drowtinefs, and to help their memories after hearing, when they come either to meditate upon what they have heard themfelves, or to communicate it to others; and many have had reafon to blefs God for his advice and inftruction herein : he would advife people fometimes to look over the fermon-notes that they had written, as a ready way to revive the good imprefions of the truths they had heard, and would beene those who made waste-paper of them; for for (faith he) " the day is coming, when you will ei-" ther thank God for them, or heartily wifh you had " never written them."

But it is time we return to Westminster - school, where, having begun to learn Chrift, we left him in the fuccefsful purfuit of other learning, under the eye and care of that great mafter Dr Bufby ; who, on the account of his pregnancy and diligence, took a particular kindnefs to him, call'd him his child, and would fometimes tell him he flould be his heir; and there was no love loft betwixt them. Dr Bufby was noted for a very fevere fchool-mafter, especially in the beginning of his time. But Mr Henry would fay fometimes, that as in fo great a fchool there was need of a ftrict difcipline, fo for his own part, of the four years he was in the fchool, he never felt the weight of his hand but once, and then (faith he in fome of the remarks of his youth which he wrote long after,) I deferved it; for being monitor of the chamber, and according to the duty of his place, being fent out to feek one that played truant; he found him out where he had hid himfelf, and at his earneft request promifed to make an excufe for him, and to fay he could not find him; which (faith he in a penitential reflection upon it afterwatds) I wickedly did. Next morning the truant coming under examination, and being afked whether he faw the monitor, faid, Yes, he did : at which Dr Bufby was much furprifed, and turned his eye upon the monitor, with thefe words, " what, thou my " fon !" and gave him correction, and appointed him to make a penitential copy of Latin veries, which when he brought he gave him fixpence, and received him into his favour again.

Among the mercies of God to him in his youth (and he would fay 'twere well if parents would keep an account of those for their children, till they come to be capable of doing it for themselves, and then to fet them upon the doing of it,) he hath recorded a remarkable deliverance he had here at Westminster-B 2 fchool, fchool, which was this : It was cuftomary there, among the fludious boys, for one or two, or more, to fit up the former part of the night at fludy, and when they went to bed, about midnight to call others; and they others at two or three a clock, as they defired. His requeft was to be called at twelves and being awaked, defired his candle might be lighted, which fluck to the bed's head; but he dropt afleep again, and the candle fell, and burnt part of the bed and bolfter ere he awaked; but, through God's good providence, feafonable help came in, the fire foon quenched, and he received no harm. This gave him occafion long after to fay, " It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not " confumed."

When he was at Weftminster-school he was employed by Dr Busby, as some others of the most ingenious and industrious of his scholars were, in their reading of the Greek authors, to collect, by his direction, some materials for that excellent Greek grammar which the Doctor afterwards published.

But be the fchool ever fo agreeable, youth is defirous to commence man by a removal from it : this ftep he took in the fixteenth year of his age. It was the ancient cuftom of Westminster-school, that all the King's fcholars who ftood candidates for an election to the University, were to receive the Lord's Supper the Eafter before, which he did with the reft, in St Margaret's church, at Easter 1647; and he would often speak of the great pains which Dr Busby took with his fcholars that were to approach to that folemn ordinance, for feveral weeks before, at ftated times; with what skill and feriousness of application, and manifest concern for their fouls, he opened to them the nature of the ordinance, and of the work they had to do in it; and inftructed them what was to be done in preparation for it; and this he made a bufinels of, appointing them the religious exercises instead of their school exercifes. What fuccefs this had, through the grace of God, upon young Mr Henry (to whom the doctor had had a particular regard) read from his own hand: "There had been treaties (faith he) before, between " my foul and Jefus Chrift, with fome weak overtures " towards him; but then, then I think it was that the " match was made, the knot tied : then I fet myfelf, " in the ftrength of divine grace, about the great work " of felf-examination, in order to repentance; and " then I repented; that is, folemnly and ferioufly, " with fome poor meltings of foul; I confeffed my " fins before God, original and actual, judging and " condemning myfelf for them, and cafting away from " me all my tranfgreffions, receiving Chrift Jelus the " Lord, as the Lord my righteoufnefs, and devoting " and dedicating my whole felf abfolutely and unre-" fervedly to his fear and fervice. After which, com-" ing to the ordinance, there, there I received him " indeed, and he became mine, I fay mine. Blefs the " Lord, O my foul !"

Dr Bufby's agency, under God, in this bleffed work, he makes a very grateful mention of, in divers of his papers; "The Lord recompense it (faith he) a thou-"fand fold, into his bosom."

I have heard him tell how much he furprifed the doctor the first time he waited upon him after he was turned out by the Act of Uniformity; for when the doctor asked him, "Pr'ythee (child) what made thee " a nonconformist?" "Truly, Sir, (faith Mr Henry,) " you made me one;" for you taught me those things that hindered me from conforming.

"Encouraged by this experience, I have myfelf (faith he in one of his papers) taken like pains with divers others at their first admission to the Lord's table, and have, through grace, feen the comfortable fruits of it, both in mine own children, and others. To God be the glory."

Mr Jeremy Dyke's book of the Sacrament, I have heard him fay, was of great use to him at that time, in his preparation for that ordinance.

Thus was this great concern happily fettled before his his launching out into the world, which through grace he had all his days more or lefs the comfort of, in an even ferenity of mind, and a peaceful expectation of the glory to be revealed.

May 17, 1647, he was chofen from Westminsterfchool to Christ-church in Oxford, jure loci, with four others, of which he had the fecond place. At his election he was very much countenanced and finiled upon by his god-father the Earl of Pembroke, who was one of the electors.

CHAP. II.

His Years spent at Oxford.

THOUGH he was chosen to the University in May, yet being then young, under fixteen, and in love with his fchool-learning, he made no great hafte thither. 'Twas in December following, 1647, that he removed to Oxford. Some merciful providences in his journey (he being a young traveller) affected him much, and he used to speak of them, with a sense of God's goodneis to him in them, according to the impreffions then made by them; and he hath recorded them with this thankful note, " That there may be a great mer-" cy in a finall matter :" as the care that was taken of him by ftrangers, when he fainted and was fick in his inn the first night, and his cafual meeting with Mr Annefly, fon to the Vifcount Valentia (who was chofen from Westminster-school at the fame time that he was) when his other company, going another way, had left him alone, and utterly at a lofs what to do. Thus, the fenfible remembrance of old mercies may anfwer the intention of new ones, which is to engage our obedience to God, and to encourage our dependance on him.

Being come to Oxford, he was immediately entered commoner of Christ-church, where Dr Samuel Fell was was then dean; the tutor affigned to him and the reft of that election was Mr Underwood, a very learned, ingenious gentleman.

His godfather, the Earl of Pembroke, had given him ten pounds to buy him a gown, to pay his fees, and to fet out with. This in his papers he puts a remark upon, as a feafonable mercy in regard of fome ftraits, which providence, by the calamity of the times, had brought his father to. God had taught him from his youth that excellent principle, which he adhered to all his days, that "every creature is that to us, and "no more, than God makes it to be;" and therefore, while "many feek the ruler's favour," and fo expect to "make their fortunes," as they call it, feeing "every man's judgment proceedeth from the Lord;" it is our wifdom to feek his favour, who is the ruler of rulers, and that is an effectual way to make fure our happinefs.

To the proper ftudies of this place he now vigoroufly addreffed himfelf; but fill retaining a great kindnels for the claffick authors, and the more polite exercises he loved fo well at Weftminfter-school.

He was admitted fludent of Christ-church March 24, 1647-8, by Dr Henry Hammond, that great man, then Sub-Dean, who call'd him his god-brother, the Earl of Pembroke being his god-father alfo, and Prince Henry the other, who gave him his name.

The vifitation of the University by the Parliament happened to be in the very next month after. Oxford had been for a good while in the hands of the Parliament, and no change made; but now the Earl of Pembroke, and feveral others thereunto appointed, came hither to fettle things upon a new bottom. The account Mr Henry in his papers gives of this affair, is to this purpofe: The fole question which the visitors propos'd to each perfon, high and low, in every College, that had any place of profit, was this, "Will you fub-" mit to the power of the Parliament in this prefent " visitation?" to which all were to give in their anfiver fwer in writing, and accordingly were either difplaced or continued. Some cheerfully complied, others ablolutely refused (among whom he would fometimes tell of one that was but of his standing, who gave in this bold anfwer, "I neither can, nor will fubmit to the " power of the Parliament in this prefent visitation; "" I fay I cannot, I fay I will not," (J. C.) Others an-fwered doubtfully, pleading youth and ignorance in fuch matters. Mr Henry's anfwer was, "I fubmit to " the power of the Parliament in the prefent vifitation, " as far as I may with a fafe conficience and without " perjury." His reafon for the laft falvo was, becaufe he had taken the oaths of allegiance and fupremacy a little before, at his admiffion; which he was (according to the character of the good man, that he fears an oath) very jealous of doing any thing to contradict or infringe ; which hath made him fometimes fignify fome diflike of that practice of administring oaths to fuch as were fcarce paft children, who could hardly be fuppofed to take them with judgement, as oaths fhould be taken. However, this answer of his fatisfied; and by the favour of the Earl of Pembroke he was continued in his ftudent's place. But great alterations were made in that, as well as in other Colleges, very much (no queftion) to the hinderance and difcouragement of young fcholars, who came hither to get learning, not to judge of the rights of government. Dr Samuel Fell, the Dean, was removed, and Dr Edward Reynolds, afterwards Bifhop of Norwich, was put in his room : Dr Hammond, and all the canons, except Dr Wall, were difplaced, and Mr Wilkingfon, Mr Pocock, and others of the Parliament friends, were preferred to their places. His thoughts of this, in the reflection long after, was, that milder methods might have done better, and would have been a firmer establishment to the new interest : but confidering that many of those who were put out (being in expectation of a fudden change, which came not of many years after) were exafperating in their carriage towards the vifitors; and that the Parliament (who

(who at this time rode mafters) had many of their own friends ready for Univerfity-preferments, (which Oxford, having been from the beginning a garrifon for the king, they had been long kept out of) and thefe they were concerned to oblige, it was not ftrange if they took fuch ftrict methods. And yet nothing being required but a bare fubmiflion, which might be interpreted but as crying Quarter, he thought, withal, that it could not be faid the terms were hard, efpecially (faith he) if compar'd with those of another nature imposed fince.

Among other student-masters removed, his tutor, Mr Underwood, was one, which he often bewail'd as ill for him, for he was a good fcholar, and one that made it his business to look after his pupils, who were very likely, by the bleffing of God, to have profited under his conduct : but upon the removal of Mr Underwood, he, with fome others, were turned over to Mr Finmore, who was then in with that interest which was uppermoft, and was afterwards prebendary of Chefter; a perfon (as he notes) able enough, but not willing to employ his abilities for the good of those that were committed to his charge; towards whom he had little more than the name of a tutor. This he lamented as his infelicity, at his first fetting out. But it pleas'd God to give him an interest in the affections of a young man, an under-graduate then, but two or three years his fenior from Westminster, a Mr Richard Bryan, who took him to be his chamber-fellow while he continued at Oxford, read to him, looked over his studies, and directed him in them. Of this gentleman he makes a very honourable mention, as one who was, through God's bleffing, an inftrument of much good to him. Mr John Fell alfo, the Dean's fon (afterward himfelf dean of Chrift-church, and bifhop of Oxford) taking pity on him, and fome others that were neglected, voluntarily read to them for fome time; a kindnefs which he retain'd a very grateful fenfe of, and for which he much honour'd that learned and worthy perfon. Here С

Here he duly performed the college-exercifes, difputations every day, in term time; themes and verfes once a week, and declamations when it came to his turn; in which performances he frequently came off with very great applaufe: and many of his manufcripts, which remain, fhew how well he improved his name there.

And vet in fome reflections I find under his hand, written long after (wherein he looks back upon his early days) he chargeth it upon himfelf, that for a good while after he came to the university (though he was known not to be inferior to any of his flanding, in publick exercifes, yet) he was too much a ftranger to that hard ftudy which afterwards he became acquainted with, and that he loft a deal of time which might have been better improved. Thus he is pleafed to accufe himfelf of that which (for ought I ever heard) no one elfe did, or could accufe him of. But the truth is, in all the fecret accounts he kept of himfelf, he appears to have had a very quick and deep fenfe of his own failings and infirmities, in the moft minute inftances, the lofs of time, weaknefs and diffractions in holy duties; not improving opportunities of doing good to others, and the like; lamentably bewailing these imperfections, and charging them upon himfelf, with as great expreffions of fhame and forrow, and felf-abhorrence; and crying out as earnefly for pardon and forgivenefs in the blood of Jefus, as if he had been the greatest of finners; for though he was a man that walked very clofely, yet withal he walked very humbly with God. and lived a life of repentance and felf-denial. This minds me of a fermon of his, which one might difcern came from the heaft, on that fcripture, Rom. vii. 24. " O wretched man that I am, who fhall deliver me from " the body of this death !" a ftrange complaint (faith he) to come from the mouth of one who had learned in every flate to be content. Had I been to have given my thoughts (faid he) concerning Paul, I fhould have faid, O bleffed man that thou art, that haft been in the third third heaven, a great apoftle, a fpiritual father to thoufands, &c. and yet a wretched man all this while, in his own account and efteem. He never complains thus of the bonds and afflictions that did abide him, the prifons that were frequent, the ftripes above meafure; but the body of death, that is, the body of fin, that was it he groaned under. How feelingly did he obferve from thence, "That the remainders of indwelling " corruption are a very grievous burthen to a gracious " foul."

But to return : It may not be amifs to fet down the caufes to which he afcribes his lofs of time when he came first to the university. One was, that he was young, too young, and underftood not the day of his opportunities, which made him afterwards advife his friends not to thrust their children forth too soon from fchool to the univerfity, though they may feem ripe, in refpect of learning, till they have diferetion to manage themfelves : while they are children, what can be expected but that they fhould mind childifh things? Another was, that coming from Weftminfter-fchool, his attainments in fchool-learning were beyond what generally others had that came from other fchools; fo that he was tempted to think there was no need for him to fludy much, becaufe it was fo eafy to him to keep pace with others; which, he faith, was the thing Dr Caldecott, chaplain to the Earl of Pembroke, and his great friend, warned him of at his coming to Oxford. Another was, that there were two forts of perfons his cotemporaries, fome of the new flamp, that came in by the vifitation, and were divers of them ferious, pious young men, but of finall ability, comparatively, for learning, and those for that reason he defired not to have much fellowship with. But there were others that were of the old fpirit and way, enemies to the parliament, and the reformation they made; and these were the better fcholars, but generally not the better men. With them for a while he ftruck in, becaufe of their learning, and converfed most with them : but he C 2 foon foon found it a fnare to him, and that it took him off from the life of religion, and communion with God, Elanguescere mox cepit (faith he in a Latin narrative of his vounger years) pristina pietatis ardor, Ec. but " for ever praifed be the riches of God's free grace " (faith he, in another account) that he was pleafed " Itill to keep his hold of me; and not to let me alone " when I was running from him, but fet his hand " again the fecond time, (as the expression is, Isaiah " xi. 11.) to fnatch me as a brand out of the fire." His recovery from this fnare he would call a kind of fecond conversion; fo much was he affected with the preventing grace of God in it, and fenfible of a double bond to be for ever thankful, as well as of an engagement to be watchful and humble. 'Twas a faying of his, " He that flumbleth and doth not fall, gets ground " by his ftumble."

At the latter end of the year 1648 he had leave given him to make a vifit to his father at Whitehall, with whom he staid fome time : there he was Jan. 30. when the King was beheaded, and with a very fad heart faw that tragical blow given. Two things he used to fpeak of, that he took notice of himfelf that day, which I know not whether any of the hiftorians mention. One was, that at the inftant when the blow was given, there was fuch a difmal, univerfal groan, among the thousands of people that were within fight of it (as it were with one confent) as he never heard before; and defired he might never hear the like again, nor fee fuch a caufe for it. The other was, that immediately after the stroke was struck, there was, according to order, one troop marching from Charing-crofs towards King-street, and another from King-street towards Charing-crofs, purpofely to difperfe and fcatter the people, and to divert the difinal thoughts which they could not but be fill'd with, by driving them to fhift every one for his own fafety. He did upon all occafions teftify his abhorrence of this unparallel'd action, which he always faid was a thing that could not be juftify'd, and

and yet he faid he faw not how it could be called a national fin; for, as the king urged upon his trial, it was certain that not one man of ten in the kingdom did confent to it * : nor could it be call'd the fin of the Long Parliament, for far the greatest part of them were all that time, while the thing was in agitation, imprifon'd and kept under a force, and fcarce twenty-feven of the forty that were left to carry the name of a parliament, did give their vote for it; which the commissioners for the trying of the king's judges, in the year 1660, (fome of whom had been themfelves members of the Long Parliament) urged again and again, in anfwer to that plea which the prifoners flood fo much upon, that what they did was by authority of the parliament : but 'tis manifest it was done by a prevailing party in the army, who (as he us'd to express it) having beaten their plowillares into fwords, could not fo ealily beat their fwords into plowshares again, as having fought more for victory and dominion, than for peace and truth; but how far thefe men were acted and influenced by another fort of people behind the curtain, the world is not altogether ignorant. For fome years after King Charles II. came in, he observed the yearly day of humiliation for this fin, defiring that God would not lay the guilt of blood to the charge of the nation : but afterwards finding to what purpofes it was generally obferved, and improved even to the reproach and condemning not only of the innocent but of fome of the excellent ones of the land; and noting that there is no precedent in fcripture of keeping annual days of humiliation for particular fins, especially after the immediate judgment is at an end, Zech. viii. 19. Heb. x. 2, 3. he took no farther notice of it. But in his diary, he adds this tender remark, (according to the fpirit he was of) " yet good men, no deubt, may observe it to " the

* See the bifhop of Chichefter's fermon before the king 30 Jan. 1697. where he faith, he did not fee how it could be call'd a national fin.

The Life of Mr PHILIP HENRY.

" the Lord," Rom. xiv. 6. Thus he judged not, and why then fhould he be judged ?

In the year 1650-1 he took his batchelor of arts degree, and he hath recorded the goodnefs of God in raifing him up friends who helped him out in the expences. Such kindneffes have a peculiar fweetnefs in them to a good man, who fees and receives them as the kindnels of God, and the tokens of his love.

He would often mention it with thankfulnefs to God. what great helps and advantages he had then in the univerfity, not only for learning, but for religion and piety. Serious godliness was in reputation; and befides the public opportunities they had, there were many of the scholars that us'd to meet together for prayer, and Christian conference, to the great confirming of one another's hearts in the fear and love of God, and the preparing of them for the fervice of the church in their generation. I have heard him fpeak of the prudent method they took then about the university-fermons on the Lord's day in the afternoon, which us'd to be preached by the fellows of colleges in their courfe; but, that being found not for much for edification, Dr Owen and Dr Goodwin performed that fervice alternately, and the young mafters that were wont to preach it, had a lecture on Tuefday appointed them. The fermons he heard at Oxford he commonly wrote, not in the time of hearing, but afterwards, when he came home, in his reflection upon them, which he found a good help to his memory.

In December 1652, he proceeded mafter of arts, and in January following preached his first fermion at South-Hincksey in Oxfordshire, on John vili. 34. "Whofo-"ever committeth fin, is the fervant of fin." On this occasion he writes in his diary, what was the breathing of his heart towards God, "The Lord make use of "me as an infrument of his glory, and his churches "good, in this high and holy calling !"

His great parts and improvement, notwithstanding his extraordinary modelty and humility, had made him fo well known in the university, that in the following act, in July 1653, he was chosen out of all the masters of that year, to be junior of the act, that is, to answer the philosophy questions in vesperiis, which he did with very great applause; especially for the very witty and ingenious oration which he made to the university upon that occasion. His questions were, 1. An licitum fit carnibus vesci? aff. 2. An institutio academiarum fit utilis in Republica? aff. 3. An institutio academiarum fit utilis in Republica? aff. 3. An ingenium pendeat ab bumoribus corporis? aff. At the act in 1654 he was chofen Magister Replicans, and answered the philosophy questions in constitus, with a like applause. His questions then were, 1. An melicus sit sperare quam frud? neg. 2. An maxima animi delectatio sit a fensious ? neg. 3. An utile sit peregrinari ? aff.

Dr Owen, who was then vice-chancellor, hath fpoken with great commendation of thefe performances of Mr Henry's to fome in the univerfity afterwards, who never knew him otherwife than by report : and I have heard a worthy divine (who was fomewhat his junior in the univerfity, and there a perfect ftranger to him) fay, how much he admired thefe exercifes of his, and loved him for them ; and yet how much more he admired, when he afterwards became acquainted with him in the country, that fo curious and polite an orator fhould become fo profitable and powerful a preacher, and fo readily lay afide the enticing words of man's wifdom, which were fo eafy to him.

There is a copy of Latin verfes of his in print, among the poems which the univerfity of Oxford published upon the Peace concluded with Holland in the year 1654, which shew him to be no lefs a poet than an orator.

He hath noted it of fome pious young men, that before they removed from the university into the country, they kept a day of fasting and humiliation for the fins they had been guilty of in that place and state. And in the visits he made afterwards to the university, he inferts into his book, as no doubt God did into his,---" a tear dropt over my university-fins."

CHAP. III.

His removal to Worthenbury in Flintshire; bis Ordination to the Ministry, and bis Exercise of it there.

W Orthenbury is a little town by Dee fide, in that Hundred of Flintshire which is separated some miles from the reft of the county, and known by the name of English Mialors, because though it is reputed in Wales, as pertaining to Flintshire, yet in language and cuftoms it is wholly English, and lies mostly between Chefhire and Shropfhire. Worthenbury was of old a parochial chapel, belonging to the rectory of Bangor, but was feparated from it in the year 1658, by the truftees for uniting and dividing of parifhes, and was made a parish of itself. But what was then done, being vacated by the king's coming in, it then came to be in /tatu quo, and continued an appurtenant to Bangor, till, in the fecond year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, it was again, by act of Parliament, feparated, and made independant upon Bangor. That was the only all that paffed the royal affent with the act of recognition, at the beginning of the fecond parliament of this reign. The principal family in Worthenbury parish is that of the Pulestons of Emeral. The head of the family was then John Puleston, ferjeant at law, one of the judges of the common-pleas.

This was the family to which Mr Henry came from Chrift-church, prefently after he had compleated his mafter's degree, in 1653; ordered into that remote, and unto him unknown corner of the country, by that over-ruling Providence which determineth the times before appointed, and the bounds of our habitation.

The judge's lady was a perfon of more than ordinary parts and wildom; in piety inferior to few, but in learning fuperior to most of her fex, which I could give infrances of from what I find among Mr Henry's papers, papers, particularly an elegy fhe made upon the death of the famous Mr John Selden, who was her great friend.

This was the lady whole agency first brought Mr Henry into this country. She wrote to a friend of her's, Mr Francis Palmer, student of Christ-church, to defire him to recommend to her a young man to be in her family, and to take the over-fight of her fons (fome of whom were now ready for the University) and to preach at Worthenbury on the Lord's days, for which a very honourable encouragement was promifed. Mr Palmer propofed it to his friend Mr Henry, who was willing for one half year to undertake it. provided it might be required of him to preach buc once on the Lord's day, and that fome other fupply might be got for t'other part of the day, he being now but twenty-two years of age, and newly entered upon that great work. Provided alfo, that he fhould be engaged but for half a year, as little intending to break off fo foon from an academical life, which he delighted in fo much. But preferring ufefulnefs before his own private fatisfaction, he was willing to make trial for a. while in the country, as one that fought not his own things, but the things of Jefus Chrift, to whofe fervice in the work of the ministry he had entirely devoted himfelf, bending his studies wholly that way. In the latter part of his time at Oxford, as one grown weary of that which he used to fay he found little to his purpofe, he employed his time mostly in fearching the fc:iptures, and collecting ufeful fcripture-obfervations, which he made very familiar to him, and with which he was "throughly furnished for this good work." He got a Bible interleaved, in which he wrote fhor notes upon texts of fcriptures as they occurred. He would often fay, "I read other books, that I may be " the better able to understand the fcripture."

It was a ftock of fcripture knowledge that he fet up with, and with that he traded to good advantage. Though he was fo great a mafter in the eloquence of D Cicero Cicero, yet he preferred far before it that of Apollos, who was " an eloquent man, and mighty in the fcrip-" tures, Acts xviii. 24."

He bid very fair at that time for Univerfity-preferment, fuch was the reputation he had got at the late act, and fuch his intereft in Dr Owen: but the "fal-"vation of fouls" was that which his heart was upon, to which he postponed all his other interests.

In September 1653 he came down to Emeral, from whence a meffenger was fent on purpole to Oxford to conduct him thither. Long after, when it had pleafed God to fettle him in that country, and to build him up into a family, he would often reflect upon his coming into it first; what a stranger he then was, and how far it was from his thoughts ever to have made his home in those parts: and passing over the brook that parts between Flintshire and Shropshire, would fometimes very affectionately use that word of Jacob's, "With my staff I passed over this Jordan, and now I " am become two bands."

At Emeral he prayed in the family, was tutor to the young gentlemen, and preached once a day at Worthenbury; other help being procured for the other part of the day, according to his requeft, out of a fear, being fo young, to take the whole work upon him. But it foon happened, that one Lord's day, the fupply that was expected failed; and fo he was neceflitated, rather than there fhould be a vacancy, to preach twice, in which he found the promife fo well fulfilled, " as " the day is, fo fhall the ftrength be;" and, " to him " that hath (i. e. that hath, and ufeth what he hath) " fhall be given, and he fhall have abundance;" that, to the great fatisfaction of his friends there, from thenceforward he waved looking out for other help than what came from above, and would fometimes fpeak of this as an inftance, that "we do not know what we can " do, till we have tried."

Here he applied himfelf to a plain and practical way of preaching, as one truly concerned for the fouls of those those he fpoke to. He would fay fometimes, " we ftu-" dy how to fpeak that you may underftand us." And " I never think I can fpeak plain enough when I am " fpeaking about fouls and their falvation." I have heard him fay, he thought it did him good, that for the first half year of his being at Worthenbury, he had few or no books with him, which engaged him (in fludying fermons) to a clofer fearch of the fcripture and his own What fuccefs his labours had in that parifh, heart. which, before he came to it (I have been told) was accounted one of the most loofe and prophane places in all the country, may be gathered from a letter of the Lady Pulefton's to him, at the end of the first half year after his coming to Emeral, when he was uncertain of his continuance there, and inclinable to return to fettle at Chrift-church. Take the letter at large :

" Dear Mr HENRY,

" The indifpolition that my fadnels hath bred, and the ftay of Mrs V. here yesterday, hindered my 45 answering your last expressions. As to ordering the 66 66 conversation, and perfevering to the practice of those 65 good intents, taken up while one is in purfuit of a mercy, you and I will confer as God gives oppor-" 65 tunity, who also must give the will and the deed, by his Spirit, and by the rule of his word. 64 As to " begging that one thing for you, God forbid (as Sa-66 muel faid) that I fhould ceafe to pray, &c. This L 66 am fure, that having wanted hitherto a good mini-" fter of the word among us, I have oft, by prayer and 66 fome tears, above five years befought God for fuch 6 G a one as yourfelf; which having obtained, I cannot " yet defpair, feeing he hath given us the good means, " but he may alfo give us the good end. And this I " find, that your audience is increafed three for one " in the parifh (though in winter, more than formerly " in fummer,) and five for one out of other places. " And I have neither heard of their being in the ale-" houfe on our Lord's day, nor ball-playing that day, " which D 2

" which before you came was frequent (except that " day that young Ch. preached :) I think I can " name four or five in the parifh, that of formal Chrif-" tians, are becoming, or become real : but you know all are not wrought on at first, by the word. (Some 56 66 come in no misfortune like other men, and this is " the caufe they be fo holden with pride, &c.) Hypo-" crites alfo have converted conversion itself : yet God " may have referved those that have not bowed the " knee to Baal, &c. and may call them at the latter " part of the day, though not in this half year. It is " a good fign, most are loth to part with you : and you " have done more good in this half year than I have " difcerned thefe eighteen years : but, however, wheth-" er they will hear, or whether they will forbear, you " have delivered your own foul. I have prayed, and " do pray, feeing God hath fent you, that you may " be for his glory, and not for our condemnation."

It is eafy to imagine what an encouragement this was to him thus at his first fetting out to fee of the travel of his foul, and what an inducement it was to him not to leave those among whom God had thus owned him. However, that fpring he returned to Oxford. The Lady Pulefton foon after came to him thither, with her five fons, of whom fhe placed the two eldeft under his charge, in the College. In the following vacation he went to London to visit his relations there; and there in October he received a letter from Judge Pulefton, with a very folemn and affectionate requelt, fubfcribed by the parishioners of Worthenbury, earnestly defiring his fettlement among them, as their minister, which he was perfwaded to comply with, having fixed to himfelf that good rule, in the turns of his life, to " follow Pro-" vidence, and not to force it :" fo in the winter following he came down again, and fettled with them. He continued in his student's place in Christ-church for two or three years, attending the fervice of it once a year; but difposing of most of the profit of it for the ule of poor fcholars there.

The tithe of Worthenbury belonged to Emeral family, paying fome rent to the rector of Bangor; this tithe Judge Pulelton was willing to give (clear of that charge) to the minister of Worthenbury for ever: but fuch was the peculiar and extraordinary kindnefs he had for Mr Henry, upon the experience of his merits, that he chofe rather, by deed of indenture, bearing date 6 October 1655, between himfelf and Mr Henry, "In " confideration of his being pleafed to undertake the " cure of fouls, and to preach and teach, and perform " other duties of divine fervice in the parifh-church " of Worthenbury (fo the deed runs) to give, grant, " and confirm for himfelf and his heirs, unto the faid " Philip Henry, the yearly rent of one hundred pounds, " charged upon all his mefluages, lands, and tene-" ments in the feveral counties of Flint, Denbigh, and " Chefter, to be paid quarterly, until fuch times as " the faid Philip Henry fhall be promoted or preferred " to fome other fpiritual or ecclefiaftical living or preferment," with power of diffres in case of non-payment. A hundred a year was more than Worthenbury tithes were worth at that time; and the manner of the gift freed the maintenance from much of that lofs and incumbrance which commonly attends the gathering of tithe.

He ftill continued for fome years in Emeral family, where he laid out himfelf very much for the fpiritual good of the family, even of the meaneft of the fervants, by catechizing, repeating the fermons, and perfonal inftruction, and he had very much comfort in the countenance and converfation of the Judge and his Lady. Yet he complains fometimes in his diary of "the fnares " and temptations that he found in his way there;" efpecially becaufe fome of the branches of the family, who did not patrizare, were uneafy at his being there, which made him willing to remove to a houfe of his own; which, when Judge Pulefton perceived, in the year 1657, out of his abundant and continued kindnefs to him, he did, at his own proper coft and charges, build build him a very handfome houfe in Worthenbury, and fettled it upon him by a leafe, bearing date March 6th 1657, for threefcore years, "if he fhould fo long " continue minifter at Worthenbury, and not accept of " better preferment."

He hath noted in his diary, that the very day that the workmen began the building of that houfe, Mr Mainwaring of Malpas preached the lecture at Bangor, from Pfalm cxxvii. 1. "Except the Lord build the "houfe, they labour in vain that build it." There never was truth (faith he) more feafonable to any than this was to me: it was a word upon the wheels. He hath recorded it as his great care, that his affections might be kept loofe from it, and that it might not encroach upon God's interest in his heart. When it was finisfied, he thus writes: "I do from my heart bless God, " that no hurt or harm befel any of the workmen in " the building of it."

Thus was his maintenance fettled at Worthenbury. In the year 1659, he was, by a writing of Judge Pulefton's, collated, nominated, and prefented to the church of Worthenbury, and (the powers that then were having fo appointed) he had an approbation thereof from the commissioners for approbation of publick preachers.

Some little opposition was made to his fettlement at Worthenbury by Mr Fogg, then rector of Bangor, becaufe he conceived it an intrenchment upon his right to Worthenbury, and thought it might prejudice his recovering of it by courfe of law. I only mention this for the fake of the note he hath upon it in his diary, which is this; " I do earneftly defire that the judge " may give Mr Fogg all reafonable fatisfaction, that " there may be no appearance of wrong to him, or " any other, in this thing." And when Mr Fogg infiftted upon it, that he would have Mr Henry give it under his hand, that he defired the confent of the faid Mr Fogg to be minifter of Worthenbury; he yielded to do it for peace-fake, and from thenceforward there was was an intimate and entire friendship between Mr Fogg and him.

Being thus fettled at Worthenbury, his next care was touching ordination to the work of the ministry, to which he would fee his call very clear, before he folemnly devoted himfelf to it. And though afterwards in the reflection (efpecially when he was filenced) it was fome trouble to him, that he had fo long deferred to be ordained, (and he would often, from the confideration of that, prefs those who intended the ministry not to put it off) yet as the times then were, there was fomething a reason for it.

The nearest acting class of prefbyters was in the Hundred of Bradford, north in Shropshire, wherein Mr Porter of Whitchurch was the leading man, of whom Mr Baxter gives fo high a character in his life, part 3. page 94. and who was one of those whom he recommended to the Lord Chancellor as fit to be made a bishop, part 2. p. 283. This class was constituted by ordinance of Parliament in April 1647; the members of it, then, were the aforefaid Mr Porter, Mr Boughy of Hodnet, Mr Houghton of Prees, Mr Parfons of Wem, and Mr John Bifby; and afterwards Mr Malden of Newport; Mr Binney of Ightfield, and Mr Steel of Hanmer (though in Flintshire) were taken in to them, and acted with them. This clafs, in twelve years time, publickly ordained fixty-three ministers. Mr Henry was very defirous to have been ordained at Worthenbury, plebe prasente, which he thought most agreeable to the intention, but the ministers were not willing to fet fuch a precedent : however, that was one thing which occafioned the delay, fo that he was not ordained till 16 Sept. 1657.

The way and manner of his ordination was according to the known directory of the affembly of divines, and the common ufage of the prefbyterians; and yet he having left among his papers a particular account of that folemnity, and fome of the workings of his foul towards God in it, 1 hope it may be of fome ufe, both for for inftruction and quickening to ministers, and for the information of fuch as are perhaps wholly ftrangers to fuch a thing, to give fome account of the whole transaction.

He made addreffes to the prefbytery, in order to his ordination, July 6. at Prees, when he fubmitted to trial; and inquiry was made, in the first place, concerning his experience of the work of grade in his heart; in anfwer to which he gave a reafon of the hope that was in him, with meeknefs and fear; that the fpirit of grace had been dealing with him when he was young, and he hoped had difcovered to him his need of Chrift, and had bowed his will in fome meafure to clofe with him upon his own terms, &c. His skill in the original languages of the fcripture was then tried; and he read and conftrued two verfes in the Hebrew Bible, and two in the Greek Teftament : he was then examined in logick and natural philosophy, next in divinity, what authors he had read, and what knowledge he had touching the nucdiation of Chrift, &c. And his skill in the scripture was tried, by propounding to him a difficult text to give his fense of; a case of conficience was also put to him to be refolved, and inquiry made into his acquaintance with church-hiftory. Laftly, a queftion was given him to provide a thefis upon against next meeting, which was this, An Providentia Divina extendat fe ad omnia? Aff. On this queftion he exhibited his thefis, August 3. and defended it. Several of the ministers oppofed, and Mr Porter moderated. He then produced two certificates, which he left with the register of the clafs, one from Oxford, fubfcribed by Dr Wilkinfon, Dr Langley, &c. the other from the neighbour minifters, Mr Steel, Mr Fogg, &c. both teffifying of his conversation, &c. " The Lord forgive me (faith he in " his diary upon this) that it hath not been more " exemplary as it ought for piety and industry." Amen, Lord in Chrift. The day for ordination was appointed to be Sept. 16. at Prees, of which notice was given at Worthenbury by a paper, read in the church, and afterwards wards affixed to the church-door the Lord's day before, fignifying alfo, " That if any one could produce " any juft exceptions against the doctrine or life of the " faid Mr Henry, or any fufficient reason why he " might not be ordained, they should certify the fame " to the classifies, or the fcribe, and it should be heard " and confidered."

On the day of ordination there was a very great affembly gathered together. Mr Porter began the public work of the day with prayer, then Mr Parfons preached on 1 Tim. i. 12. " I thank Chrift Jefus, who hath " enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting " me into the miniftry." Putting men into the miniftry is the work of Jefus Chrift. After fermon, Mr Parfons, according to the ufual method, required of him a confession of his faith, which he made as follows:

"The ground and rule of my faith towards God, is "the Scripture of the Old and New Teftament : I be-"lieve they were written by holy men, immediately "infpired by the Holy Ghoft ; having found the effica-"cy of them in fome meafure upon my own heart, "I believe they are further able to make me wife to "falvation.

" Concerning God, I believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of those that diligently feek him.

"The trinity of perfons in the unity of the God-"head, I receive and own as a truth, I admire and "adore as a myftery; though no man hath feen God at any time, yet the only-begotten Son, which is in "the bofom of the Father, he hath declared him, and "what he hath declared concerning him, that I be-"lieve. I believe that Godis a Spirit, for the Son hath faid, God is a Spirit. I believe that he hath life in "himfelf, and that he hath given to the Son to have "life in himfelf. I believe all things were made by "him, and without him was not any thing made that "was made. I believe by his providence he preferves, "guides, and governs all the creatures, according to "the the purpole of his own will to his own glory; for the Father worketh hitherto, and the Son alfo worketh.

I believe he made man upright after his own image and likenefs, which image confifted in knowledge, righteoufnefs, and true holinefs, but man by fin loft it.

" I believe we were all in the loins of our first pa-" rents, and that they stood and fell as publick perfons, and upon that account justly, without any colour of wrong, we bear our share, both in the guilt of their disobedience, and also the corruption of nature following thereupon; fo that we come into the world children of wrath, and heirs of the curfe, one as well as another; enemies to God, hating him, and hated of him: averse to what is good, and prone to all manner of evil. Though all are born in this condition, yet there are fome that do not die in it.

" I believe there is a Mediator, and there is but one " Mediator between God and men, the man Chrift " Iefus. Those whom the Father hath from everialiting 66 pitched his love upon, and given to Chrift, not be-56 caufe of works or faith forefeen, but merely of his " free grace; for those I believe Chrift was fent forth " into the world, made of a woman, made under the " law : for their fakes he fanctified himfelf, and be-" came obedient to death, even the death of the crofs ; " wherefore God alfo highly exalted him; and having " raifed him from the dead on the third day; fet him " at his own right hand, where he ever lives, to make interceffion for those for whom he fhed his blood. 66 " All these elect redeemed ones I believe are in due " time, fooner or later, in their lives, effectually called, " washed, fanctified, justified in the name of the Lord " Jefus, and by the Spirit of our God.

" I believe the righteoufnefs of Chrift alone, appre-"hended by faith, is the matter of our juftification before God; and that no flefh can ftand in his fight "upon any other terms, for he is the Lord our Righteoufnefs, and in him only the Father is well pleafed. L be" I believe the work of fanctification, managed by the Spirit, who dwelleth in us, though in refpect of parts it be complete, for the whole man is renewed; yet in refpect of degrees it is not fully perfected till we come to glory; and I believe all that are juftified fhall be glorified, for we are kept by the power of God, through faith unto falvation.

" I believe the gathering in and building up of "faints, is the fpecial end why paftors and teachers "are appointed in the church : and that Jefus Chrift, "according to his promife, will be with them, in that "work, to the end of the world.

"The two facraments of the New Teftament, bap-"tifm and the Lord's fupper, I receive and own as figns and feals of the covenant of grace; the former infituted by our Lord Jefus, as a fign and feal of our engraffing into him, due, of right, to all the infants of believing parents, and but once to be adminiftred; the other inflituted by our Lord Jefus in the night wherein he was betrayed, to fhew forth his death, and to feal the benefits purchafed thereby to his church and people, and to be often repeated.

"When the body returns to the duft, I believe the foul returns to God that gave it; and that immediately it receives from him the fentence, according to what hath been done in the flefh; either, Come, inherit the kingdom;---or, Depart, accurfed, into everlafting fire,

" I believe, befides this, a day of general judgment in the end of the world, wherein we mult all appear before the tribunal of Jefus Chrift; and that our bodies, being raifed by an Almighty power from the duft, fhall be united to the fame fouls again, and fhall partake with them in the fame condition, either of happinefs or mifery, to all eternity. Thofe that have done good fhall come forth unto the refurrection of life; and thofe that have done evil, to the refurrection of damnation."

This is the fum and fubftance of my faith, into  $E_2$  which which I was baptized, and in which, by the grace of God, I will live and die.

Mr Parfons then propofed certain queftions to him, according to the inftructions in the directory, to which he return'd anfwer as followeth :

Queffion 1. What are your ends in undertaking the work and calling of a minifler?

Anfwer. As far as upon fearch and inquiry I can hitherto find, though there be that within me that would feek great things for myfelf (if indeed they were to be found in this calling) yet with my mind I feek them not. But the improvement of the talent which I have received in the fervice of the gofpel, for the glory of God, and the falvation of fouls, I hope is in my eye; if there be any thing elfe, I own it not, I allow it not; while fo many feek their own, it is my defire, and fhall be my endeavour, to feek the things of Jefus Chrift.

Queft. 2. What are your purpofes, as to diligence and induftry in this calling?

Anfw. I do purpofe and refolve, by the help of God, to give myfelf wholly to thefe things; to prayer, reading, meditation, inftant preaching in feafon and out of feafon, wherein I fhall very gladly fpend and be fpent, if by any means I may both fave myfelf and them that hear me. And when at any time I fail herein, I defire God by his Spirit, and my chriftian friends, neighbours, and brethren, by feafonable reproof and admonition, to put me in mind of this engagement now made in the prefence of this great congregation.

Queft. 3. Do you mean to be zealous and faithful in the defence of truth and unity, against error and schifm?

Anfw. I believe what the Spirit hath foretold, that in the laft days perilous times shall come, wherein men will not endure found doctrine, but after their own luss shall heap unto themselves teachers. 'Tis my resolution, by the grace of Christ, to watch in all things; to contend earnessly for the faith, to hold fast the form

¢f.

•f found and wholfome words, even the words of our Lord Jefus, and the doctrine which is according to godlinefs, in meeknefs, as I am able, inftructing thofe that oppofe themfelves : and for peace and unity, if my heart deceive me not, I fhall rather chufe to hazard the lofs of any thing that is most dear to me, than be any way knowingly acceffary to the diffurbance of thefe in the churches of Chrift.

Queft. 4. What is your perfwasion of the truth of the reformed religion?

Anfw. My perfwafion is, that the bifhop of Rome is that man of fin, and fon of perdition whom the Lord Jefus will confume with the fpirit of his mouth, and whom he will deftroy by the brightnefs of his coming. And the feparation which our first reformers made, I do heartily rejoice in, and blefs Goa for, for had we ftill continued to partake with him in his fins, we fhould in the end have partaked with him alfo in his plagues.

Queft. 5. What do you intend to do when the Lord shall alter your condition, and bring a family under your charge?

Anfw. When the Lord fhall pleafe in his Providence to bring me into new relations, I hope he will give me grace to fill them up with duty; it is my purpofe to wait upon him, and to keep his way, to endeavour in the ufe of means, that all that are mine may be the Lord's.

Queft. 6. Will you in humility and mecknefs fubmit to admonition and difcipline?

Anfw. I believe it to be a duty incumbent upon all that profefs the name of Chrift, to watch over one another, and that when any is overtaken in a fault those that are fpiritual are to fet him in joynt again with the fpirit of meeknefs. It fhall be my endeavour in the ftrength of Jefus Chrift to walk without rebuke, and when at any time I ftep afide. (for who is there that lives and fins not) I fhall account the finitings of my brethren kindnefs, and their wounds faithful.

Queft.

Queft. 7. What if troubles, perfecutions, and difcouragements arife, will you hold out to the end notwith flanding ?

Anfw. Concerning this I am very jealous over my own heart, and there is caufe. I find a great want of that zeal and courage for God, which I know is required in a minifter of the golpel, neverthelefs, I perfwade myfelf that no temptation fhall befall me but fuch as is common to man, and that God who is faithful, will not fuffer me to be tempted above that which I am able, but that with the temptation he will alfo make a way to efcape, that I may be able to bear it. I promife faithfulnefs to the death, but I reft not at all in my promife to God, but in his to me----When thou goeff thro' the fire, and through the water, I will be with thee.

When this was done, Mr Parfons prayed; and in prayer, he and the reft of the prefbyters (Mr Porter, Mr Houghton, Mr Malden, and Mr Steel) laid their hands upon him, with words to this purpofe, "whom "we do thus in thy name fet apart to the work and "office of the ministry." After him, there were five more, after the like previous examinations and trials, profeffions and promifes, at the fame time in like manner fet apart to the ministry.

Then Mr Malden of Newport clofed with an exhortation directed to the newly-ordained ministers, in which (faith Mr Henry in his diary) this word went near my heart: " As the nurfe puts the meat first in-" to her own mouth, and chews it, and then feeds the " child with it, fo should ministers do by the word; " preach it over before-hand to their own hearts, it " lofes none of the virtue hereby, but rather probably " gains. As that milk nouriss that fermion which " comes warm from a warm heart. Lord quicken me " to do thy will in this thing."

The claffis gave him, and the reft, inftruments in parchment, certifying this, which it may fatisfy the curiofity of fome to read the form of :----

" Whereas

" Whereas Mr Philip Henry of Worthenbury, in " the county of Flint, mafter of arts, hath addreffed " himfelf unto us, authorized by an ordinance of both " Houses of Parliament, of the 29th of August 1648, " for the ordination of minifters, defiring to be or-" dained a prefbyter, for that he is chosen and appoint-" ed for the work of the ministry at Worthenbury in " the county of Flint, as by a certificate now remaining with us, touching that his election and appointment, 66 66 appeareth. And he having likewife exhibited a " fufficient testimonial of his diligence and proficiency " in his studies, and unblameableness of his life and 66 converfation, he hath been examined according to the rules for examination in the faid ordinance ex-66 preffed; and thereupon approved, there being no 66 just exception made, nor put in against his ordina-66 66 tion and admission. These may therefore testify to 66 all whom it may concern, that upon the fixteenth 66 day of September 1657, we have proceeded fo-66 lemnly to fet apart for the office of a presbyter, and " work of the ministry of the gospel, by laying on of " our hands with fasting and prayer ; by virtue where-* 6 of we do declare him to be a lawful and fufficiently 66 authorized minister of Jefus Christ: and having good 66 evidence of his lawful and fair calling, not only to the work of the ministry, but to the exercise there-66 66 of at the chapel of Worthenbury in the county of 66 Flint, we do hereby fend him thither, and actually 66 admit him to the faid charge, to perform all the 66 offices and duties of a faithful paftor there; exhort-٢, ing the people in the name of Jefus Chrift willingly 66 to receive and acknowledge him as the minifter of 66 Chrift, and to maintain and encourage him in the 66 execution of his office, that he may be able to give 66 up fuch an account to Chrift of their obedience to 66 his ministry, as may be to his joy, and their ever-64 lafting comfort. In witnefs whereof, we, the prefby-66 ters of the fourth clafs in the county of Salop, é ¢ commonly called Bradford North Clafs, have here-" unto " unto fet our hands, this 16th day of September, in " the year of our Lord God, 1657.

> The. Porter, moderator for the time. Andrew Parfons, minister of Wem. Aylmar Haughton, minister of Prees. John Malden, minister of Newport. Richard Steel, minister of Hanmer.

I have heard it faid by thofe who were prefent at this folemnity, that Mr Henry did, in his countenance, carriage, and expression, difcover such an extraordinary ferious field and gravity, and such deep impressions made upon his spirit, as greatly affected the auditory, and even struck an awe upon them.

Read his reflection upon it in his diary :---- "Me-" thought I faw much of God in the carrying on of " the work of this day. O, how good is the Lord, he is " good, and doth good; the remembrance of it I shall " never lofe: to him be glory. I made many promifes " of diligence, faithfulness, &c. but I lay no stress at " all on them, but on God's promife to me, that he " will be with his ministers always to the end of the " world. Amen, Lord, fo be it. Make good thy word " unto thy fervant, wherein thou haft caufed me to " put my truft." And in another place, "I did this day " receive as much honour and work as ever I shall " be able to know what to do with : Lord Jefus, pro-" portion fupplies accordingly." Two fcriptures he defired might be written in his heart, 2 Cor. vi. 4, 5, &c. and 2 Chron. xxix. 11.

Two years after, upon occafion of his being prefent at an ordination at Whitchurch, he thus writes : " This " day my ordination-covenants were in a fpecial man-" ner renewed, as to diligence in reading, prayer, me-" ditation, faithfulnefs in preaching, admonition, cate-" chizing, facraments, zeal againft error and profane-" nefs, care to preferve and promote the unity and " purity of the church, notwithftanding oppofition and " perfecution, tho' to death. Lord, thou haft filled my " hands with work, fill my heart with wifdom and " grace, " grace, that I may difcharge my duty to thy glory, " and my own falvation of those that hear me.", Amen.

Let us now fee how he applied himfelf to his work at Worthenbury. The fphere was too narrow for fuch a burning and fhining light: there were but forty-one communicants in that parifh when he firft fet up the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, and they were never doubled: yet he had fuch low thoughts of himfelf, that he not only never fought for a larger fphere, but would never hearken to any overtures of that kind made to him: and withal, he had fuch high thoughts of his work, and the worth of fouls, that he laid out himfelf with as much diligence and vigour here, as if he had had the over-fight of the greateft and most confiderable parifh in the country.

The greatest part of the parish were poor tenants, and labouring husbandmen; but the fouls of fuch (he used to fay) are as precious as the fouls of the rich, and to be looked after accordingly. His prayer for them was, "Lord, despise not the day of small things "in this place, where there is fome willingness, but "much weakness." And thus he writes upon the Judge's fettling a handsome maintenance upon him: "Lord, thou knowest, I feek not theirs, but them: give me the fouls."—

He was in labours more abundant to win fouls: befides preaching, he expounded the fcriptures in order, catechized and explained the catechifm. At first he took into the number of his catechumens fome that were adult, who (he found) wanted instruction; and when he had taken what pains he thought needful with them, he difmissed them from further attendance, with commendation of their proficiency, and counsel to hold fast the form of found words; to be watchful against the fins of their age, and to apply themselves to the ordinance of the Lord's fupper, and make ready for it; afterwards he catechized none above feventeen or eighteen years of age.

He fet up a monthly lecture there of two fermons. one he himfelf preached, and the other his friend Mr Ambrofe Lewis of Wrexham, for fome years. He alfo kept up a monthly conference in private from house to house, in which he met with the more knowing and iudicious of the parish; and they discoursed familiarly together of the things of God, to their mutual edification, according to the example of the apoftles, who, tho' they had the liberty of public places, yet taught alfo from house to house, Acts v. 42. xx. 20. That which induced him to fet and keep up this exercife as long as he durft (which was till August 1660,) was, that by this means he came better to understand the fate of his flock, and fo knew the better how to preach to them, and pray for them, and they to pray one for another. If they were in doubt about any thing relating to their fouls, that was an opportunity of getting fatisfaction. It was likewife a means of increasing knowledge, and love, and other graces; and thus it abounded to a good account.

He was very industrious in visiting the fick, instructing them, and praying with them; and in this he would fay, he aimed at the good, not only of those that were fick, but also of their friends and relations that were about them.

He preached funeral fermons for all that were buried there, rich or poor, old or young, or little children; for he looked upon it as an opportunity of doing good : he called it, fetting in the plough of the word, when providence had foftned and prepared the ground. He never took any money for that or any other ministerial performance, befides his flated falary, for which he thought himfelf obliged to do his whole duty to them as a minister.

When he first fet up the ordinance of the Lord's fupper there, he did it with very great folemnity. After he had endeavoured to instruct them in his publick preaching, touching the nature of that ordinance, he difcourfed perforally with all that gave up their names names to the Lord in it, touching their knowledge, experience, and conversation, obliged them to observe the law of Chrift, touching brotherly admonition in cafe of fcandal; and gave notice to the congregation who they were that were admitted; adding this: " concerning thefe, and myfelf, I have two things to " fay; I. As to what is past, we have finned : if we " fhould fay, we have not, we fhould deceive ourfelves, 66 and the truth were not in us; and yet this with-" al we can fay, and have faid it, fome of us with tears, " we are grieved that we have finned. 2. For time to " come we are refolved by God's grace to walk in " new obedience; and yet feeing we are not angels, " but men and women, compassed about with infir-" mities and temptations, it is poffible we may fall; " but if we do, it is our declared refolution to fubmit " to admonition and cenfure, according to the rule of " the gofpel." And all along he took care fo to manage his admissions to that ordinance, as that the weak might not be difcouraged, and yet the ordinance might not be profaned. He would tell those whom he was neceffitated to debar from the ordinance for ignorance, that he would undertake, if they were but truly willing, they might in a week's time, by the bleffing of God upon their diligent ufe of means, reading, prayer, and conference, get fuch a competent measure of knowledge, as to be able to difcern the Lord's body. And those that had been fcandalous, if they would but come in and declare their repentance, and refolutions of new obedience, they fhould no longer be excluded.

To give a fpecimen of his lively administrations of that ordinance, let me transcribe the notes of his exhortation at the first facrament that ever he administred, Nov. 27. 1659. I fuppose they are but the hints of what he enlarged more upon, for he had always a great fluency upon fuch occasions:

" Dearly beloved in our Lord and Saviour Jefus " Chrift, we are met together this day about the moft " folemn weighty fervice under heaven; we are come " to a feaft, where the feaft-maker is God the Father. " the provision God the Son, whole flesh is meat in-" deed, and whole blood is drink indeed; the guefts " a company of poor finners, unworthy fuch an hon-" our ; the crumbs under the table were too good for " us, and yet we are admitted to tafte of the provision " upon the table; and that which makes the feast is " hearty welcome. God the Father bids you welcome; " and ten thousand welcomes this day, to the flesh and " blood of his Son: think you hear him faying it to " you, O believing fouls, Cant. v. 1. Eat, O friends; " drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved. The end " of this feaft is to keep in remembrance the death of " Chrift, and our deliverance by it, and thereby to " convey fpiritual nourishment and refreshment to our " fouls. But withal, give me leave to alk you one " question, What appetite have you to this feast? Are " you come hungring and thirsting? fuch as have the " promife, they shall be filled. He filleth the hungry " with good things, but the rich are fent empty away : " a honey-comb to a full foul is no honey-comb.---" Canft thou fay as Chrift faid ? With defire I have de-" fired to eat this. In this ordinance here's Chrift and " all his benefits exhibited to thee. Art thou weak? " here's bread to ftrengthen thee. Art thou fad ? here's " wine to comfort thee. What is it thou standest in " need of ? A pardon ? here it is fealed in blood, take " it by faith, as I offer it to you in the name of the " Lord lefus. Though thy fins have been as fcarlet, " they shall be as wool, if thou be willing and obe-" dient. It may be, here are fomethat have been drunk-" ards, fwearers, fcoffers at goodlinefs, fabbath-" breakers, and what not? and God hath put it into " your hearts to humble yourfelves, to mourn for and " turn from all your abominations; O come hither, " here's forgiveness for thee. What else is it thou " wanteft ? O (faith the poor foul) I would have more " of the fpirit of grace, more power against fin, espe-" cially my own iniquity : why, here it is for thee, " from

" from the fullness that is in Jefus Christ we receive, and grace for grace, John i. 16. We may fay as David did, Pfalm cviii. 7, 8. God hath spoken in his holiness; and then, Gilead is mine, and Manasse mine: fo God hath spoken in his word fealed in his facrament, and then Christ is mine, pardon is mine, grace is mine, comfort mine, glory mine; here I have his bond to shew for it. This is to those among you that have engaged their hearts to approach up to God this day.

"But if there be any come hither with a falle, un-" believing, filthy, hard heart, I do warn you ferioufly, " and with authority, in the name of Jefus Chrift, " prefume not to come any nearer to this facred ordi-" nance : you that live in the practice of any fin, or " the omiffion of any duty against your knowledge " and confcience; you that have any malice or grudge " to any of your neighbours, leave your gift, and go " your ways; be reconciled to God, be reconciled to " your brother, and then come.---Better fhame " thyfelf for coming fo near, than damn thyfelf by " coming nearer : I teftify to those, who fay they shall " have peace, though they go on still in their trespaf-" fes, that there's poifon in the bread; take it and " eat it at your own peril : there's poifon in the cup " too, you drink your own damnation : I wash my " hands from the guilt of your blood, look you to it. " On the other hand, you poor penitent fouls that are. " loft in yourfelves, here's a Chrift to fave you ; come, " O come, ye that are weary and heavy laden, &c."

It may not be amifs to transcribe also fome hints of preparation for the administring of the ordinance of baptifin, which I find under his hand at his first fetting out in the ministry, as follows:

" It is a real manifestation of the goodnels and love of God to believers, that he hath not only taken them into covenant with himself, but their feed also; faying, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed. Tho, to be born of fuch doth not necessarily entitle infants

The Life of Mr Philip HENRY.

" infants to the fpiritual mercies of the covenant, for " grace doth not run in a blood : we fee the contrary " many times, even godly parents have wicked chil-" dren; Abraham had his Ifhmael, and Ifaac his Efau, " vet queffionless it doth entitle them to the external " privileges of the covenant. The like figure unto " Noah's ark, even baptifm doth alfo now fave us: " Noah and all that were his, entered into the ark, <sup>66</sup> though we have caufe to doubt whether they all en-" tered into heaven. While our Lord Jefus was here " upon the earth, they brought little children to him. " and he laid his hands on them, and bleffed them; " and faid moreover, Suffer little children to come " unto me, and forbid them not, (there are many at " this day that forbid little children to come to Chrift;) " he adds the reafon, For of fuch is the kingdom of " heaven. Whether it be meant of the vifible church, " often fo called in the gofpel, or of the flate of glory " in another world; either way it affords an argu-" ment for proof of infant baptifm. When either pa-" rent is in covenant with God, their children alfo are " in covenant with him; and being in covenant, they <sup>44</sup> have an undoubted right and title to this ordinance " of baptifm, which is the feal of the covenant. So " that in the administration of this ordinance, this day, " according to the inftitution of Jefus Chrift, we look " upon you, the father of this child, as a perfon " in covenant with God: how far you have dealt un-" faithfully in the covenant, is known to God and " your own confcience; but this we know, the vows " of God are upon you; and let every one that na-" meth the name of Chrift depart from iniquity. But " before we baptize your child, I am to acquaint you " in a few words what we expect from you.

" Que??. 1. Do you avouch God in Jefus Chrift this day to be your God ?—See to it that this be done in truth and with a perfect heart : you may tell us you do fo, and you may deceive us, but God is not mocked. Q. 2. And is it your defire, that your " your children alfo may be received into covenant " with the Lord, and that the Lord's broad-feal of " baptifm may be fet to it ? ? 3. And do you pro-" mife, in the prefence of God, and of this congrega-" tion, that you will do your endeavour towards the " training of it up in the way of godlinefs, that as it " is by you through mercy that it lives the life of na-" ture, fo it may by you alfo, through the fame mer-" cy, live the life of grace : elfe I muft tell you, if " you be wanting herein, there will be a fad appear-" ance one day, when you fhall meet together before " the judgement-feat of Chrift, and this folemn en-" gagement of yours will be brought in to witnefs a-" gainft you."

These were but the first instances of his skilfulness, in difpenfing the mysteries of the kingdom of God. He declined the private administration of the Lord's fupper to fick perfons, as judging it not confonant to the rule and intention of the ordinance. He very rarely, if ever, baptized in private; but would have children brought to the folemn affembly upon the Lord's day, that the parent's engagement might have the more witneffes to it, and the child the more prayers put up for it, and that the congregation might be edified. And yet he would fay, there was fome inconvenience in it too, unlefs people would agree to put off the feafting part of the folemnity to fome other time, which he very much perfwaded his friends to; and obferved, that Abraham made a great feaft the fame day that Ifaac was weaned, (Gen. xxi. 8.) not the fame day that he was circumcifed.

His carriage towards the people of his parifh was very exemplary, condefcending to the meaneft, and converfing familiarly with them; bearing with the infirmities of the weak, and becoming all things to all men. He was exceeding tender of giving offence, or occafion of grief to any body, minding himfelf in his diary upon fuch occafions, that the wifdom that is from above, is " pure, and peaceable, and gentle, &c."

Yet

Yet he plainly and faithfully reproved what he faw amifs in any, and would not fuffer fin upon them; mourning alfo for that which he could not mend. There were fome untractable people in the parish, who fometimes caufed grief to him, and exercifed his boldnefs and zeal in reproving. Once hearing of a merry meetting at an ale-houfe on a Saturday night, he went himfelf and broke it up, and fcattered them. At another time, he publickly witneffed against a frolick of fome vain people, that on a Saturday night came to the church with a fiddler before them, and dreffed it up with flowers and garlands, making it (as he told them) more like a play-houfe; and was this their preparation for the Lord's day, and the duties of it ? &c. He minded them of Eccl. xi. g. " Rejoice, O young man, in " thy youth, but know thou"---

Many out of the neighbouring parifhes attended upon his miniftry, and fome came from far, though fometimes he fignified his diflike of their fo doing, fo far was he from glorying in it. But they who had fpiritual fenfes exercifed to difcern things that differ, would attend upon that miniftry which they found to be most edifying.

He was about eight years from first to last, labouring in the word and doctrine at Worthenbury, and his labour was not altogether in vain : he faw in many of the travel of his to the rejoycing of his heart, but with this particular difpenfation (which I have heard him fometimes (peak of) that most, or all of those in that parifh, whom he was (through grace) inftrumental of good to, died before he left the parish, or quickly after; fo that within a few years after his removal thence, there were very few of the vifible fruits of his ministry there; and a new generation fprung up there, who knew not Joseph. Yet the opportunity he found there was of doing the more good, by having those that were his charge near about him, made him all his days bear his teftimony to parish order, where it may be had upon good terms, as much more eligible, and more more likely to answer the end, than the congregational way of gathering churches from places far diftant, which could not ordinarily meet to worfhip God together. From his experience here (though he would fay we must do what we can, when we cannot do what we would) he often wished and prayed for the opening of a door, by which to return to that order again.

He had not been long at Worthenbury, but he began to be taken notice of by the neighbouring minifters, as likely to be a confiderable man. Though his extraordinary modefty and humility (which even in his youth he was remarkable for) made him to fit down with filence " in the lowest room, and to fay as Elihu, " Days shall speak ;" yet his eminent gifts and graces could not long be hid, the ointment of the right hand will betray itfelf; and a perfon of his merits could not but meet with those quickly, who faid, "Friend, go up " higher;" and fo that fcripture was fulfilled, Luke xiv. 10. He was often called upon to preach the weekday lectures, which were fet up plentifully, and diligently attended upon in those parts, and his labours were generally very acceptable and fuccefsful. The vox populi fastened upon him the epithet of Heavenly Henry, by which title he was commonly known all the country over, and his advice was fought for by many neighbouring ministers and christians, for he was one of those that found favour and good understanding in the fight of God and man. He was noted at his first fetting out (as I have been told by one who was then intimately acquainted with him, and with his character and conversation) for three things, 1. Great piety and devotion, and a mighty favour of godlinefs in all his converfe. 2. Great industry in the purfuit of uleful knowledge: he was particularly observed to be very inquifitive when he was among the aged and intelligent; hearing them, and afking them queftions : a good example to young men, efpecially young min-3. Great felf-denial, felf-diffidence, and felfifters. abasement: this eminent humility put a luftre upon all all his other graces. This character of him, minds me of a paffage I have fometimes heard him tell, as a check to the forwardnefs and confidence of young men, that once at a meeting of ministers, a question of moment was started, to be debated among them : upon the first proposal of it, a confident young man shoots his bolt prefently, "Truly (faith he) I hold it fo." "You "hold, Sir, (faith a grave minister,) it becomes you "to hold your peace."

Befides his frequent preaching of the lectures about him, he was a conftant and diligent attendant upon those within his reach, as a hearer; and not only wrote the fermons he heard, but afterwards recorded in his diary what in each fermon reached his heart, affected him and did him good; adding fome proper, pious ejaculations, which were the breathings of his heart, when he meditated upon, and prayed over the fermon.

What a wonderful degree of piety and humility doth it evidence, for one fo acquainted with the things of God, to write, "This I learnt out of fuch a fermon ;--and, This was the truth I made up to myfelf out of fuch a fermon!" and indeed fomething out of every fermon. His diligent improvement of the word preached contributed (more than any one thing, as a means) to his great attainments in knowledge and grace. He would fay fometimes, that one great ufe of week-day lectures was, that it gave minifters an opportunity of hearing one another preach, by which they are likely to profit, when they hear not as mafters, but as fcholars; not as cenfors, but as learners.

His great friend and companion, and fellow labourer in the work of the Lord, was the worthy Mr Richard Steel (minister of Hanmers, one of the next parishes to Worthenbury) whose praise is in the churches of Christ, for his excellent and useful treatifes, the Husbandman's Calling; an Antidote against Distractions, and feveral others. He was Mr Henry's alter idem, the man of his counsel; with him he joined frequently at Hanmer, and elsewhere, in Christian conference, ference, and in days of humiliation and prayer : befides, their meetings with other minifters at public lectures; after which it was ufual for them to fpend fome time among themfelves in fet difputations in Latin. This was the work that in those days was carried on among ministers who made it their business, as iron sharpens iron, to provoke one another to love and good works. What was done of this kind in Worceftershire, Mr Baxter tells us in his life.

In the beginning of those days he often laboured under bodily diftempers : it was feared that he was in a confumption; and fome blamed him for taking fo much pains in his ministerial work, fuggesting to him, Master, spare thyself. One of his friends told him, he lighted up all his pound of candles together; and that he could not hold out long at that rate; and wifhed him to hufband his strength better. But he often reflected upon it with comfort afterwards, that he was not influenced by fuch fuggestions. The more we do, the more we may do (he would fometimes fay) in the fervice of God. When his work was fometimes more than ordinary, and bore hard upon him, he thus appealed to God ; " Thou knoweft, Lord, how well contented I am " to fpend and to be fpent in thy fervice ; and if the out-" ward man decay, O let the inward man be renewed." Upon the returns of his indifpolition he expresset a great concern how to get fpiritual good by it; to come out of the furnace, and leave fome drofs behind; for it is a great lofs to lofe an affliction. He mentions it as that which he hoped did him good, that he was ready to look upon every return of diftemper as a fummons to the grave: thus he learned to die daily. " I find (faith he) my earthly tabernacle tottering, and " when it is taken down, I fhall have a building in hea-" ven, that fhall never fail. Bleffed be God the Father, " and my Lord Jefus Chrift and the good Spirit of grace. " Even fo, Amen." This was both his ftrength and his fong, under his bodily infirmities.

While he was at Worthenbury he conftantly laid G 2 by by the tenth of his income for the poor, which he carefully and faithfully difpofed of, in the liberal things which he devifed, efpecially the teaching of poor children: and he would recommend it as a good rule to lay by for charity (in fome proportion, according as the circumstances are) and then it will be the eafier to lay out in charity; we shall be the more apt to feek for opportunities of doing good, when we have money lying by us, of which we have faid, This is not our own, but the poor's. To encourage himfelf and others to works of charity, he would fay, " He is no fool who " parts with that which he cannot keep, when he is fure " to be recompenfed with that which he cannot lofe." And yet to prove alms to be righteoufnefs, and to exclude all boafting of them, he often used the words of David, " Of thine own, Lord, have we given thee."

In the year 1658, the ministers of that neighbourhood began to enlarge their correspondence with the minifters of North-Wales; and feveral meetings they had at Ruthin and other places that year, for the fettling of a correspondence, and the promoting of unity and love, and good understanding among themselves. by entering into an affociation, like those fome years before of Worceftershire and Cumberland, to which, as their pattern (those two having been published) they did refer themfelves. They appointed particular affociations; and (notwithstanding the differences of apprehenfion that were among them; fome being in their judgments epifcopal, others congregational, and others claffical) they agreed to lay afide the thoughts of matters in variance, and to give to each other the righthand of fellowship; that with one shoulder and with one confent, they might fludy each in their places to promote the common interests of Christ's kingdom, and the common falvation of precious fouls. He obferved, that this year, after the death of Oliver Cromwell, there was generally throughout the nation a great change in the temper of God's people, and a mighty tendency towards peace and unity, as if they were by confent confent weary of their long clashings, which in his diary he expressed his great rejoicing in, and his hopes that the time was at hand, when Judah should no longer vex Ephraim, nor Ephraim envy Judah, neither should they learn war any more. And though these hopes were foon difappointed by a change of the fcene, yet he would often fpeak of the experience of that and the following year in those parts, as a specimen of what may yet be expected, (and therefore in faith prayed for) when the Spirit shall be poured out upon us from on high. But, alas ! who fhall live when God doth this ? From this experience he likewife gathered this obfervation, " that it is not fo much our difference of opinion " that doth us the mifchief, (for we may as foon expect " all the clocks in the town to ftrike together, as to fee " all good people of a mind in every thing on this hea-" ven,) but the milmanagement of that difference."

In the affociation of the ministers it was referred to Mr Henry to draw up that part of their agreement which concerned the worfhip of God, which talk he performed to their fatisfaction : his preface to what he drew up begins thus: " Though the main of our de-" fires and endeavours be after unity in the greater " things of God; yet we judge uniformity in the " circumstances of worship a thing not to be al- $\mathbf{m}_{\mathbf{c}}$  together neglected by us; not only in regard of that " influence which external vifible order hath upon the "beauty and comelinefs of the churches of Chrift, " but alfo as it hath a direct tendency to the ftrength-" ening of our hands in ministerial fervices, and " withal to the removing of those prejudices which " many people have conceived, even against religion " and worthip itself. We bless God from our very " fouls, for that whereunto we have already attained; " and yet we hope fome further thing may be done, " in reference to our clofer walking by the fame rule, " and minding the fame things. The word of God " is the rule which we defire and refolve to walk by " in the administration of ordinances; and for those " things " things wherein the word is filent, we think we may " and ought to have recourfe to Christian prudence, -" and the practice of the reformed churches, agreeing " with the general rules of the word : - and therefore " we have had (as we think we ought) in our prefent " agreement, a fpecial eye to the directory," &c.

These agreements of theirs were the more likely to be for good, for that here (as in Worcestershire) when they were in agitation, the ministers fet apart a day of fasting and prayer among themselves to bewail ministerial neglects, and to seek to God for direction and fuccess in their ministerial work. They met sometimes for this purpose at Mr Henry's house at Worthenbury.

One paffage may not improperly be inferted here, that once at a meeting of the minifters, being defired to fubfcribe a certificate concerning one whom he had not fufficient acquaintance with ; he refufed, giving this reafon, that he preferred the peace of his conficience before the friendfhip of all the men in the world.

Sept. 29. 1658, the Lady Puleston died. " She " was (faith he) the best friend I had on earth, but my " Friend in heaven is still where he was, and he will " never leave me nor forfake me." He preached her funeral fermon from Ifa. iii. last, " Ceafe from man, " whofe breath is in his noftrils." He hath noted this, expression of her's not long before she died: " My " foul leans to Jefus Chrift ; lean to me, fweet Saviour." About this time, he writes, " A dark cloud is over " my concernments in this family, but my defire is, " that whatever becomes of me and my interest, the " interest of Christ may still be kept on foot in this " place." Amen, fo be it. But he adds, foon after, that faying of Athanafius, which he was used often to quote and take comfort from; Nubecula eft & cito pertranfibit. It is a little cloud, and will foon blow over.

About a year after, Sept. 5. 1659, Judge Pulefton died, and all Mr Henry's intereft in Emeral family was buried in his grave. He preached the Judge's funeral fermon, from Neh. xiii. 14. "Wipe not out my " good " good deeds that I have done for the houfe of my "God, and for the offices thereof :" the defign of which fermon was not to applaud his deceafed friend, I find not a word in the fermon to that purpofe: but he took occasion from the instance of fo great a benefactor to the ministry, as the judge was, to shew that deeds done for the houfe of God, and the offices thereof, are good deeds : and to prefs people according as their ability and opportunity was, to do fuch deeds. One paffage I find in that fermon which ought to be recorded; that it had been for feveral years the practice of a worthy gentleman in the neighbouring county, in renewing his leafes, inftead of making it a condition that his tenants fhould keep a hawk or a dog for him, to oblige them that they flould keep a Bible in their houses for themselves, and should bring up their children to learn to read and to be catechized. This (faith he) would be no charge to you, and it might oblige them to that which otherwife they would neglect. Some wished (faith he, in his diary) that I had chosen fome other fubject for that fermon, but I approved myfelf to God; and if I pleafe men, I am not the fervant of Chrift.

What perfonal affronts he received from fome of the branches of that family at that time need not be mentioned, but with what exemplary patience he bore them ought not to be forgotten.

In March, 1658-9 he was very much folicited to leave Worthenbury, and to accept of the vicarage of Wrexham, which was a place that he had both a great intereft in, and a great kindnefs for, but he could not fee his call clear from Worthenbury, fo he declined it. The fame year he had an offer made him of a confiderable living near London; but he was not of them that are given to change, nor did he confult with flefh and blood, nor feek great things to himfelf.

That year he had fome difturbance from the quakers, who were fet on by fome others, who wifhed ill to his miniftry : they challenged him to difpute with them; and that which he was to prove against them was, that the God he worshipped was not an idol; that John Baddely (a blackfmith in Malpas, and the ringleader of the quakers in that country) was not infallible, nor without fin; that baptifm with water, and the Lord's fupper, are gofpel-ordinances; that the fcriptures are the word of God, and that Jefus Chrift will come to judge the world at the laft day: but he never had any public difputes with them, nor fo much diffurbance from them in public worfhip as fome other ministers had elfewhere about that time. He had fome apprehenfions at that time, that God would make the quakers a fcourge to this nation; but had comfort in this affurance, that God would in due time vindicate his own honour, and the honour of his ordinances, and those of them who will not repent, to give him glory, will be caff into the fire.

One paffage I cannot omit, becaufe it difcovers what kind of fpirit the quakers were of :—A debauched gentleman being in his revels at Malpas, drinking and fwearing, was, after a fort, reproved for it by Baddely the quaker, who was in company : Why (faith the gentleman) I'll afk thee one queftion, Whether is it better for me to follow drinking and fwearing, or to go and hear Henry? he anfwered, Of the two, rather follow thy drinking and fwearing.

The Cheihire rifing this year (in oppofition to the irregular powers that then were uppermoft) under Sir George Booth (afterwards Lord Delamere,) and that of North-Wales under Sir Thomas Middleton, could not but affect Worthenbury and the country thereabouts. Mr Henry's prayer for them in his diary, the day of their first appearing is, "Lord own them, if they "truly own thee." Henotes, that Lambert's forces which came down to fupprefs them, did in that neighbourhood efpoufe the quakers caufe, and offer injury to fome minifters: and therefore (faith he) unlefs God intend the ruin of the nation by them, they cannot profper : nor did they long, though in that expedition they they had fuccefs. In their return, fome of Lambert's foldiers were at Worthenbury church, hearing Mr Henry upon a Lord's day; and one of them fat with his hat on, while they were finging plalms, for which he publickly admonifhed him : and there being many anabaptifts among them, he hath recorded it as a good providence, that those questions in the catechism which are concerning baptifm came in courfe to be expounded that day. The first rising of the Cheshire forces was Aug. ist 1659, and the 19th following they were worsted and fcattered by Lambert's forces, near Northwich, a strange spirit of fear being upon them, which quite took off their chariot-wheels. The country called it, not the Cheshire rising, but the Cheshire race. Some blamed him that he did not give God thanks publickly for the defeat of Sir George Booth; to whom he anfwered with his ufual mildnefs, that his apprehenfions concerning that affair were not the fame with theirs. We are now (faith he) much in the dark, never more.

He preached the lecture at Chefter foon after, just at the time when Mr Cook, an eminent minister in Chefter, and feveral others, were carried prifoners to London, for their agency in the late attempt; and the city was threatned to have their charter taken away, &c. The text in courfe that day (for they preached over the latter part of that epiftle, if not the whole, at that lecture) happened to be Heb. xiii. 14. "We have here no continuing city," which he thought a word upon the wheels at that time. He notes in his diary, that when, after that, the army ruled, disturbed the Parliament, and carried all before them with a high hand, there were great grounds to fear fad times approaching ; and his prayer is, " Lord, fit thy people for the fiery trial."

He was a hearty well-wisher to the return of the King, the spring following, April 1660, and was much affected with the mercy of it. "While others rejoice "carnally (faith he) Lord, help thy people to rejoice spi-"ritually, in our public national mercies." Twas upon 58 that occasion that Mr Baxter preached his fermon of right rejoicing, on Luke x. 20.; but he and others foon faw caufe to rejoice with trembling, and to fing both of mercy and judgment; for about that time he hath this melancholy remark, "Religion lofes ground ex-" ceedingly, and profaneness gets it; help, Lord!" however, he was very industrious to quiet the minds of fome who were uneafy at that great revolution; and that fcripture yielded him much fatisfaction; John iii. 35. " The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all "things into his hands." If Chrift be not only the head of the church, but head over all things to the church, we may be affured, that all things shall be made to work together for good to it. The text alfo which the Lord put into his heart to preach upon, on the day of publick thankfgiving for the king's reftoration, was very comfortable to him, Prov. xxi. 1. " The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord." His fenfe of that great mercy of God to the nation, in the unbloody, peaceable, and legal fettlement of King Charles II. upon the throne, was the fame with that of multitudes, befides both ministers and others that were of the quiet in the land, who yet not long after fuffered very hard things under him. Soon after the return of the king, he notes how industrious fome were to remove him from Worthenbury, on which he writes this as the breathing of his foul towards God ; " Lord, if it " pleafe thee, fasten me here as a nail in a fure place ; " if otherwife, I will take nothing ill which thou doft " with me:" and when preft by his friends more earneftly than before, to accept of fome other place, " Lord, (faith " he) mine eye is up unto thee, I am wholly at thy dif-" pofal, make my way plain before my face, becaufe of " mine enemies; my refolution is, to deny myfelf if thou " calleft me. Here (or any where 'tis no great matter " where) I am."

There are two things further which I think it may be of use to give some account of in the close of this shapter. 1. Of the course of his ministry at Worthenbury, and, 2. Of the state of his foul, and the communion he had with God in those years.

As to the fubjects he preached upon, he did not ufe. to dwell long upon a text. Better one fermon upon many texts, (viz. many fcriptures opened and applied,) than many fermons upon one text : to that purpofe he would fometimes fpeak.

He used to preach in a fixed method, and linked his fubjects in a fort of chain: he adapted his method and ftyle to the capacity of his hearers, fetching his fimilitudes for illustration from those things which were familiar to them. He did not fhoot the arrow of the word over their heads in high notions, or the flourishes of affected rhetorick, nor under their feet by blunt and homely expressions, as many do under pretence of plainnefs, but to their hearts in clofe and lively applications. His delivery was very graceful and agreeable, far from being either noify and precipitate on the one hand, or dull and flow on the other. His doctrine did drop as the dew, and diftil as the focking rain, and came with a charming pleafing power, fuch as many will bear witnefs to that have wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth.

He wrote the notes of his fermons pretty large for the most part, and always very legible : but even when he had put his laft hand to them, he commonly left many imperfect hints, which gave room for enlargements in preaching, wherein he had a great felicity. And he would often advife ministers not to tye themfelves too ftrictly to their notes, but having well digefted the matter before, to allow themfelves a liberty of expression, fuch as a man's affections, if they be well raifed, will be apt to furnish him with. But for this no certain rule can be given, there are diversities of gifts, and each to profit withal.

He kept his fermon-notes in very neat and exact order; fermons in courfe, according to the order of the fubject; and occafional fermons according to the fcripture-order of the texts; fo that he could readily turn te to any of them. And yet, though afterwards he was removed to a place far enough diftant from any of that auditory, yet (though fome have defired it) he feldom preached any of thofe hundreds of fermons which he had preached at Worthenbury, no not when he preached never fo privately, but to the laft he ftudied new fermons, and wrote them as elaborately as ever; for he thought a fermon beft preached when it was newly meditated: nay, if fometimes he had occafion to preach upon the fame text, yet he would make and write the fermons over; and he never offered that to God which coft him nothing.

When he went to Oxford, and preached there before the univerfity in Chrift-church, as he did feveral times, his labours were not only very acceptable, but fuccefsful too; particularly one fermon which he preached there, on Prov. xiv. 9. "Fools make a mock at fin:" for which fermon a young mafter of arts came to his chamber afterwards to return him thanks, and to acknowledge the good imprefions which divine grace, by that fermon, had made upon his foul, which he hoped he fhould never forget.

In his diary he frequently records the frame of his fpirit in fludying and preaching. Sometimes bleffing God for fignal help vouchfafed, and owning him the Lord God of all his enlargements; at other times, complaining of great deadnefs and flraitnefs, "It is a won-"der (faith he) that I can fpeak of eternal things, with "fo little fenfe of the reality of them. Lord, ftrengthen "that which remains, which is ready to die." And he once writes thus upon a fludying day; "I forgot "explicitely and exprefsly when I began to crave help "from God, and the chariot wheels drove according-"ly. Lord, forgive my omiffions, and keep me in the "way of duty."

As to the ftate of his foul in these years, it should feem, by his diary, that he was exercised with some doubts and fears concerning it. " I think (faith he) " never did any poor creature pass through such a " mixture

" mixture of hope and fear, joy and fadnefs, affurance " and doubting, down and up, as I have done thefe " years paft."-( The notice of this may be of use to poor drooping christians, that they may know their cafe is not fingular; and that if God for a fmall moment lide his face from them, he deals with them no otherwife than as he ufeth fometimes to deal with the dearest of his servants.) It would affect one, to hear him that lived a life of communion with God, complaining of great straitness in prayer. " No life at all in the " duty, many wanderings : if my prayers were written " down, and my vain thoughts interlined, what inco-" herent nonfenfe would there be! I am ashamed; " Lord, I am afhamed, O pity and pardon." To hear him fuspecting the workings of pride of heart, when he gave an account to a friend, who inquired of him touching the fuccess of his ministry, and that he should record this concern himfelf, with this ejaculation annexed, " The Lord pardon and fubdue ;" it was a fign that he kept a very watchful eye upon the motions of his own heart.

To hear him charging it upon himfelf, that he was prefent at fuch a duty in the midft of many diffractions, not tafting fweetnefs in it, &c. When a fire is first kindled (faith he) there is a deal of fmoke and fmother, that afterwards wears away; fo in young converts, much peevifhnefs, frowardnefs, darknefs; "fo it hath " been with my foul, and  $\pounds$  it is yet in a great mea-"fure. Lord, pity, and do not quench the fmoking "flax; though as yet it do but fmoke, let thefe fparks " be blown up into a flame."

"Great mercies, but poor returns; fignal opportunities, but fmall improvements:" fuch are his complaints frequently concerning himfelf. And though few or none excelled him in profitable difcourfe, yet in that he often bewails his barrennefs and unprofitablenefs. "Little good done or gotten fuch a day for want of a heart; 'tis my fin and fhame. O that I had wings like a dove!"

Yet

Yet when he wanted a faith of affurance, he lived by a faith of adherence. "Such a day (faith he) a full "refignation was made of all my concernments, into "the hands of my heavenly Father, let him deal with "me as feemeth good in his eyes; I am learning and "labouring to live by faith, Lord, help my unbelief. Another time he notes, that many perplexing fears being upon his fpirit, they were all filenced with that fweet word which was feafonably brought to his remembrance, "Fear none of those things which thou "fhalt fuffer."

He very frequently kept days of fafting and humiliation in fecret, which he calls his days of atonement. Sometimes he obferved thefe monthly, and fometimes only upon fpecial occafions; but the memorandums in his diary (not only while he was at Worthenbury, but often after) shew what fweet communion he had with God in those folemn duties, which no eye was witnefs to, but his who "fees in fecret, and will reward " openly. Remember, O my foul, fuch a day, as a " day of more than ordinary engagements entered in-" to, and ftrong refolutions taken up of clofer walking, " and more watchfulnefs: O my God, undertake for " me !" And upon another of those days of fecret praver and humiliation, he notes, "if fowing in tears " be fo fweet, what then will the harvest be, when I " fhall reap in joy ? Blefs the Lord, O my foul, who " forgiveth all thine iniquities, and will in due time " heal all thy difeafes."

CHAP. IV.

His Marriage, Family, Family-Religion, and the Education of his Children.

H E removed from Emeral to the houfe in Worthenbury which the Judge had built for him in February 1658-9, and then had one of his fifters with him to keep his houfe. No fooner had he a tent, but God God had an altar in it, and that a fmoaking altar. There he fet up repetition on Sabbath-evenings, and welcomed his neighbours to it.

His Chriftian friends often, and fometimes his brethren in the ministry, kept days of fasting and prayer at his house. He used to tell people when they had built new houses, they must dedicate them, (referring to Deut. xx. 5. and Pfal. xxx. ult.) that is, they must invite God to their houses, and devote them to his fervice.

Providence having thus brought him into a houfe of his own, foon after provided him a help-meet for After long agitation, and fome difcouragement him. and opposition from the father, April 26th 1660 he married Katharine, the only daughter and heir of Mr Daniel Matthews of Broad-Qak, in the township of Ifcoyd, in Flintshire (but in the parish of Malpas, which is in Cheshire, and about two miles distant from Whitchurch, a confiderable market town in Shropfhire.) Mr Matthews was a gentleman of a very competent eftate; fuch a one as king James the First used to fay was the happiest lot of all others, which fet a man below the office of a juffice of peace, and above that of a petty conftable. This was his only child : very fair and honourable overtures had been made for her difpofal; but it pleafed God fo to order events, and to over-rule the fpirits of those concerned, that she was referved to be a bleffing to this good man, in things pertaining "both to life and godlinefs."

His purpofe of marriage was published in the church three Lord's days before; a laudible practice, which he greatly approved, and perfwaded others to.

The day before his marriage he kept as a day of fecret prayer and fafting.

He used to fay, those who would have comfort in that change of their condition, must fee to it, that they bring none of the guilt of the fin of their fingle state with them into the married state. And the prefence of Christ at a " wedding, will turn the water in-" to 61

" to wine;" and he will come, if he be invited by prayer.

He took all occafions, while he lived, to express his thankfulnefs to God for the great comfort he had in this relation. A day of mercy (fo he writes on his marriage day) never to be forgotten. God had given him one (as he writes afterwards) every way his helper, in whom he had much comfort, and for whom he thanked God with all his heart. He writes in his diary, April 26th 1680, " This daywe have been married " twenty years, in which time we have received of the " Lord more than twenty thousand mercies; to God be " glory." Sometimes he writes "We have been fo long " married, and never reconciled ;" that is, there never was any occafion for it. His ufual prayer for his friends in the married state was according to his own practice in that flate; that they might be mutually ferviceable to each other's faith and holinefs, and jointly ferviceable to God's honour and glory.

Her father, though he put fome hardships upon him in the terms, and had been fomewhat averfe to the match, yet by Mr Henry's great prudence, and God's good providence, he was influenced to give a free confent to it; and he himfelf, with his own hand, gave her in marriage. From this, as from other experiences, Mr Henry had learned to fay with affurance; " It is not " in vain to wait upon God, and to keep his way." Mr Matthews fettled part of his eftate before marriage upon them and theirs; he lived about feven years after; and when he died, the remainder of it came to them. This competent eftate, which the divine providence brought into his hand, was not only a comfortable fupport to him when he was turned out of his living, and when many faithful ministers of Christ were reduced to great poverty and straits; but it enabled him likewife, as he had opportunity, to preach the gofpel freely, which he did to his dying day; and not only fo, but to give for the relief of others that were in want, in which he fowed plentifully, to a very large proportion of his income; and often bleffed God that he had wherewithal, remembering the words of the Lord, how he faid, " It is more bleffed to give than to receive."

Such was his houfe, and fuch the vine which God gracioufly planted by the fide of his houfe. By her God gave him fix children, all born within lefs than eight years; the two eldeft fons, John and Matthew: the other four, daughters, Sarah, Katharine, Eleanor, and Ann. His eldeft fon John died of the meafles in the fixth year of his age, and the reft were in mercy continued to him.

The Lord having built him up into a family, he was careful and faithful in making good his folemn vow at his ordination, that " he and his houfe would ferve the " Lord." He would often fay, That we are really which we are relatively. It is not fo much what we are at church, as what we are in our families. Religion in the power of it will be family religion. In this his practice was very exemplary; he was one that walked before his houfe in a perfect way, with a perfect heart, and therein behav'd himfelf wifely. His conftant care and prudent endeavour was not only to put away iniquity far from his tabernacle, but that where he dwelt, the word of Chrift might dwell richly. If he night have no other church, yet he had a church in his houfe.

He made confcience of clofet worthip, and did abound in it, not making his family-worship to excuse for that. He hath this affecting note in his diary, upon the removing of his closet but from one room in the houfe to another, This day (faith he) my new clofet was confecrated, if I may fo fay, with this prayer, " That " all the prayers that ever should be made in it, ac-" cording to the will of God, morning, evening, and " at noon-day, ordinary or extraordinary, might be " accepted of God, and obtain a gracious anfwer." Amen and amen. It was the caution and advice which he frequently gave to his children and friends. Be fure you look to your fecret duty, keep that up whatever you do; the foul cannot prosper in the neglect of it. T He

He obferved, that apoftacy generally begins at the clofetdoor. Secret prayer is first neglected, and careless performed, then frequently omitted, and after a while wholly cast off; and then farewell God, and Christ, and all religion.

He alfo advis'd that fecret duty bé perform'd fecretly, which was the admonition he gave fometimes to those who caufed their voice to be hard on high in that duty.

Befides this, he and his wife conftantly prayed together morning and evening; and never if they were together at home or abroad was it intermitted; and from his own experience of the benefit of this practice, he would take all opportunities to recommend it to those in that relation, as conducing very much to the comfort of it, and to their furtherance in that, which he would often fay is the great duty of yoke-fellows; and that is, to all they can to help one another to hea-He would fay, that this duty of hufbands and ven. wives praying together, is intimated in that of the apostle, I Pet. iii. 7. where they are exhorted to " live " as heirs together of the grace of life, that their prayers " (efpecially their prayers together) be not hindred;" that nothing may be done to hinder them from praying together, nor to hinder them in it, nor to fpoil the fuccels of those prayers. This fanchifies the relation, and fetcheth in a bleffing upon it, makes the comforts of it the more fweet, and the cares and croffes of it the more eafy, and is an excellent means of preferving and increasing love in the relation. Many to whom he hath recommended the practice of this duty, have bleffed God for him, and for his advice concerning it. When he was abroad and lay with any of his friends he would mind them of his rule, That they who lye together muft pray together. In the performance of this part of his daily worship he he was usually short, but often much affected.

Befides these he made confcience, and made a bufiness of family-worship in all the parts of it; and in it he was uniform, steady and constant from the time that that he was first called to the charge of a family, to his dying day; and according to his own practice, he took all occafions to prefs it upon others. His doctrine once from Jofh. xxiv. 15. was, That family worship is familyduty. He would fay fometimes, If the worship of God be not in the houfe, write, " Lord have mercy on us," upon the door; for there is a plague, a curfe in it. It is the judgment of archbifhop Tillotion, in that excellent book which he published a little before his death upon this fubject ; " That constant family-worship is fo " necessary to keep alive a fense of God and religion " in the minds of men, that he fees not how any " family that neglects it can in reafon be efteemed a " family of christians, or indeed to have any religion " at all." How earneftly would Mr Henry reafon with people fometimes about this matter, and tell them what a bleffing it would bring upon them and their houfes, and all that they had. He that makes his house a little church fhall find, that God will make it a little fanctuary. It may be of ufe to give a particular account of his practice in this matter, becaufe it was very exemplary. As to the time of it, his rule was, commonly the earlier the better, both morning and evening; in the morning before worldly bufinefs crowded in, "early will " I feek thee :" he that is the first would have the first ; nor is it fit that the worship of God should stand by and wait while the world's turn is ferved. And early in the evening, before the children and fervants began to be fleepy; and therefore, if it might be, he would have prayer at night before fupper, that the body might be the more fit to ferve the foul in that fervice of God. And indeed he did industriously contrive all the circumftances of his family-worfhip, fo as to make it moft folemn and most likely to answer the end. He always made it the bufinels of every day, and not (as too many make it) a by-bufinefs. This being his fixed principle, all other affairs must be fure to give way to this. And he would tell thofe who objected against family-worship, that they could not get time for it; that if they 1 0 would would but put on christian resolution at first, they would not find the difficulty fo great as they imagined; but after a while, their other affairs would fall in eafily and naturally with this, especially where there is that wifdom which is profitable to direct ; nay, they would find it to be a great preferver of order and decency in a family, and it would be like a hem to all their other bufinels, to keep it from ravelling. He was ever careful to have all his family prefent at family-worfhip; though fometimes, living in the country, he had a great household; yet he would have not only his children and fojourners (if he had any) and domeitick fervants, but his work-men and day-labourers, and all that were employed for him, if they were within call to be prefent, to join with him in this fervice; and as it was an act of his charity many times to fet them to work for him, fo to that he added this act of piety, to fet them to work for God. And ufually when he paid his workmen their wages, he gave them fome good counfel about their fouls: yet if any that fhould come to family-worthip were at a diftance, and must be staid for long, he would rather want them, than put the duty much out of time; and would fometimes fay at night, " Better one away " than all fleepy."

The performances of his family-worship were the fame morning and evening. He observed, that under the law, the morning and the evening lamb had the fame meat-offering and drink-offering, Exod. xxix. 38,-41. He always began with a fhort, but very folemn prayer, imploring the divine prefence and grace, affiftance and acceptance; particularly begging a bleffing upon the word to be read, in reference to which he often put up this petition; " That the fame fpirit " that indited the fcripture, would enable us to under-" ftand the fcripture, and to make up fomething to " ourfelves out of it that may do us good :" and efteeming the word of God as his neceffary food, he would fometimes pray in a morning, that " our fouls might " have a good meal out of it." he commonly concluded even even this flort prayer, as he did alfo his bleffings before and after meat, with a doxology, as Paul upon all occafions, "To Him be glory," &c. which is properly adoration, and is an effential part of prayer.

He next fung a pfalm, and commonly hefung David's pfalms in order, throughout; fometimes using the old translation, but generally Mr Barton's : and his usual way was to fing a whole pfalm throughout, tho' perhaps a long one, and to fing quick; (yet with a good variety of proper and pleafant tunes) and that he might do fo, ufually the pfalm was fung without reading the line betwixt (every one in the family having a book;) which he preferred much before the common way of finging, where it might conveniently be done, as more agreeable to the practice of the primitive church, and the reformed churches abroad; and by this means he thought the duty more likely to be perform'd " in the " fpirit, and with the underftanding;" the fenfe being not fo broken, nor the affections interrupted, as in reading the line betwixt. He would fay, that a fcripture ground for finging plalms in families, might be taken from pfahn cxviii. 15. " The voice of rejoicing and of " falvation, is in the tabernacles of the righteous;" and that it is a way to hold forth godlinefs (like Rahab's fcarlet thread, Jofh. ii. 17.) to fuch as pass by our windows.

He next read a portion of fcripture, taking the Bible in order; he would fometimes blame thofe who only pray in their families, and do not read the fcripture: in prayer we fpeak to God, by the word he fpeaks to us; and is there any reafon (faith he) that we fhould fpeak all? in the tabernacle the priefts were every day to burn incenfe, and to light the lamps; the former figuring the duty of prayer, the latter the duty of reading the word. Sometimes he would fay, Thofe do well that pray morning and evening in their families; thofe do better, that pray and read the fcriptures; but thofe do beft of all that pray, and read, and fing pfalms; and Chriftians fhould covet earneftly the beft gifts.

He

The Life of Mr PHILIP HENRY.

He advifed the reading of the fcripture in order; for though one ftar in the firmament of the fcripture differ from another ftar in glory, yet wherever God hath a mouth to fpeak, we fhould have an ear to hear; and the diligent fearcher may find much excellent matter in those parts of fcripture, which we are fometimes tempted to think might have been fpar'd. How affectionately would he fometimes blefs God for every book, and chapter, and verfe, and line, in the Bible !

What he read in his family, he always expounded; and exhorted all minifters to do fo, as an excellent means of increasing their acquaintance with the fcripture. His expositions were not fo much critical as plain, and practical, and ufeful; and fuch as tended to edification, and to answer the end for which the fcriptures were written, which is to make us wife to falvation. And herein he had a peculiar excellence, performing that daily exercife with fo much judgment, and at the fame time with fuch facility and clearnefs, as if every exposition had been premeditated; and very instructive they were, as well as affecting to the auditors. His obfervations were many times very pretty and furprizing, and fuch as one fhall not ordinarily meet with. Commonly in his expositions he reduced the matter of the chapter or pfalm read, to fome heads; not by a logi-. cal analyfis, which often minceth it too fmall and confounds the fenfe with the terms; but by fuch a diffribution as the matter did most easily and unforcedly fall into. He often mention'd that faying of Tertullian's, " I adore the fulnefs of the fcriptures;" and fometimes that, Scriptura femper habit aliquid relegentibus. When fometimes he had hit upon fome ufeful obfervation that was new to him, he would fay afterwards to those about him, " How often have I read this chapter, and " never before now took notice of fuch a thing in it!" he put his children, while they were with him, to write thefe expositions; and when they were gone from him, the ftrangers that fojourned with him did the fame. What collections his children had, though but broken and and very imperfect hints; yet, when afterwards they were difpoled of in the world, were of good ufe to them and their families. Some expositions of this nature, that is, plain and practical, and helping to raife the affections and guide the conversation by the word, he often wifhed were published by fome good hand for the benefit of families : but fuch was his great modefty and felf-diffidence (though few more able for it) that he would never be perfwaded to attempt any thing of that kind himfelf. As an evidence how much his heart was upon it, to have the word of God read and underflood in families, take this paffage out of his laft will and testament : " I give and bequeath to each of my four " daughters, Mr Pool's English annotations upon the " Bible, in two volumes, of the last and best edition " that shall be to be had at the time of my decease, " together with Mr Barton's last and best translation " of the finging pfalms, one to each of them; requir-" ing and requefting them to make daily use of the " fame, for the instruction, edification, and comfort of " themfelves and their families." But 'tis time we proceed to the method of his family-worfhip.

The chapter or pfalm being read and expounded, he requir'd from his children fome account of what they could remember of it; and fometimes would difcourfe with them plainly and familiarly about it, that he might lead them into an acquaintance with it; and (if it might be) imprefs fomething of it upon their hearts.

He then pray'd, and always kneeling, which he looked upon as the fitteft and most proper gefture for prayer; and he took care that his family fhould addrefs themfelves to the duty with the outward exprefions of reverence and compofednefs. He ufually fetch'd his matter and expreffions in prayer, from the chapter that was read, and the pfalm that was fung, which was often very affecting, and helped much to ftir up and excite praying graces. He fometimes obferved in thofe pfalms, where reference is had to the feripture ftories, as pfalm lxxxiii. and many others, that thofe who are well acguainted quainted with the fcriptures, would not need to make use of the help of prefcribed forms, which are very neceffary for those that cannot do the duty without them, but are unbecoming those that can; as a go-cart is needful to a child, or crutches to one that is lame, but neither of them agreeable to one that needs them not : 'twas the comparison he commonly used in this matter. In family-prayer he was usually most full in giving thanks for family-mercies, confeffing family-fins, and begging family-bleffings. Very particular he would fometimes be in prayer for his family; if any were abfent, they were fure to have an express petition put up for them. He us'd to obferve concerning lob i. 5. that he offered burnt-offerings for his children, according to the number of them all, an offering for each child; and fo would he sometimes in praying for his children, put up a petition for each child. He always obferv'd at the annual return of the birth-day of each of his children, to blefs God for his mercy to him and his wife in that child ; the giving of it, the continuance of it, the comfort they had in it, &c. with fome fpecial requeft to God for that child. Every fervant and fojourner, at their coming into his family and their going out (befides the daily remembrances of them) had a particular petition put up for them, according as their circumftances were. The ftrangers that were at any time within his gates, he was wont particularly to recommend to God in prayer, with much affection, and chriftian concern for them and their concernments. He was daily mindful of those that defired his prayers for them, and would fay fometimes, It is a great comfort that God knows who we mean in prayer, though we do not name them. Particular providences concerning the country, as to health or ficknefs, good or bad weather, or the like, he commonly took notice of in praver, as there was occafion; and would often beg of God to fit us for the next providence, whatever it might be: nor did he ever forget to pray for the peace of Jerufalem. He always concluded family-praver, both morning morning and evening, with a folemn benediction, after the doxology; "the bleffing of God Almighty, "the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoft, be with "us," &c. Thus did he daily blefs his houfhold.

Immediately after the prayer was ended, his children together, with bended knee, afk'd bleffing of him and their mother; that is, defired of them to pray to God to blefs them: which bleffing was given with great folemnity and aflection; and if any of them were abfent, they were remembered, "the Lord blefs you " and your brother," or "you and your fifter that is " abfent."

This was his daily worfhip, which he never altered, (unlefs as is aftermentioned) nor ever omitted any part of, though he went from home ever fo early, or returned ever fo late, or had ever fo much bufinefs for his fervants to do. He would fay that fometimes he faw caufe to fhorten them; but he would never omit any; for if an excufe be once admitted for an omiffion, it will be often returning. He was not willing (unlefs the neceffity were urgent) that any fhould go from his houfe in a morning before family-worfhip; but upon fuch an occafion would mind his friends, that "Prayer " and provender never hinder a journey."

He managed his daily family-worfhip to as to make it a pleafure and not a tafk to his children and fervants; for he was feldom long, and never todious in the fervice; the variety of the duties made it the more pleafant; fo that none who join'd with him had ever any reafon to fay, Behold what a wearinefs is it! Such an excellent faculty he had of rendering religion the moft fweet and amiable employment in the world; and fo careful was he (like faceb) " to drive as the children " could go," not putting " new wine into old bottles." If fome good people that mean well would do likewife, it might prevent many of those prejudices which young perfons are apt to conceive against religion, when the fervices of it are made a toil, and a terror to them.

On

74 The Life of Mr Philip HENRY.

On Thursday evenings (instead of reading) he catechized his children and fervants in the Assembly's Catechism, with the proofs, or sometimes in a little catechism, concerning the matter of prayer, published in the year 1674, and faid to be written by Dr Collins, which they learned for their help in the gift of prayer, and he explained it to them. Or elfe they read, and he examined them in some other useful book, as Mr Pool's Dialogues against the Papists, the Assembly's Confession of Faith with the Scriptures, or the like.

On Saturday evenings, his children and fervants gave him an account what they could remember of the chapters that had been expounded all the week before, in order, each a feveral part, helping one another's memories for the recollecting of it. This he called, "gathering up the fragments which remained, " that nothing might be loft." He would fay to them fometimes as Chrift to his difciples, "Have ye under-" ftood all thefe things ?" If not, he took that occafion to explain them more fully. This exercise (which he conftantly kept up all along) was both delightful and profitable, and being managed by him with fo much prudence and fweetnefs, helped to inftill into thofe about him betimes, the knowledge and love of the holy fcriptures.

When he had fojourners in his family, who were able to bear a part in fuch a fervice, he had commonly, in the winter-time, fet weekly conferences, on queftions proposed, for their mutual edification and comfort in the fear of God; the fubstance of what was faid, he himself took and kept an account of in writing.

But the Lord's day he called and counted the Queen of days, the Pearl of the week, and obferved it accordingly. The fourth commandment intimates a fpecial regard to be had to the Sabbath in families, "thou, " and thy fon, and thy daughter," &c. it is "the Sab-" bath of the Lord in all your dwellings." In this therefore he was very exact, and abounded in the work of the Lord in his family on that day. Whatever were the circumftances of his publick opportunities, (which varied, as we shall find afterwards) his family-religion on that day was the fame : extraordinary facrifices must never fuperfede the continual burnt-offering and his meat-offering, Numb. xxviii. 15. His common falutation of his family or friends, on the Lord's day in in the morning, was that of the primitive Christians; " the Lord is rifen, he is rifen indeed;" making it his chief bufinefs on that day, to celebrate the memory of Chrift's refurrection; and he would fay fometimes, " Every Lord's day is a true Christian's Easter-day." He took care to have his family ready early on that day, and was larger in exposition and prayer on Sabbath-mornings than on other days. He would often remember, that under the law the daily facrifice was doubled on Sabbath days, two lambs in the morning, and two in the evening. He had always a particular fubject for his expositions on Sabbath-mornings; the harmony of the Evangelists feveral times over, the Scripture prayers, Old Teftament prophefies of Chrift, " Chrift the true treafure" (fo he entitled that fubject, " fought and found in the field of the Old Teftament." He conftantly fung a Pfalm after dinner, and another after fupper, on the Lord's days. And in the evening of the day his children and fervants were catechized and examined in the fenfe and meaning of the the anfwers in the catechifm; that they might not fay it (as he used to tell them) like a parrot, by rote. Then the day's Sermons were repeated, commonly by one of his Children, when they were grown up, and while they were with him; and the family gave an account what they could remember of the word of the day, which he endeavoured to fasten upon them, as a nail in a fure place. In his prayers on the evening of the Sabbath, he was often more than ordinarily enlarged ; as one that found not only God's fervice perfect freedom, but his work its own wages, and a great reward; not only after keeping, but (as he used to observe from Pfal. xix. 11.) in keeping God's commandments. Α prefent K 2 prefent reward of obedience in obedience. In that prayer he was ufually very particular, in praying for his family and all that belong'd to it. It was a prayer he often put up, that we might have grace to carry it " as " a Minister, and a Minister's wife, and a Minister's " children, and a Minister's fervants should carry it, " that the ministry might in nothing be blamed." He would fometimes be a particular interceffor for the towns and parifhes adjacent : how have I heard him. when he hath been in the mount with God, in a Sabbath-evening-prayer, wreftle with the Lord for Chefter, and Shrewibury, and Nantwich, and Wrexham, and Whitchurch, &c. those nefts of fouls, wherein there are fo many, that cannot difcern between their right hand and their left in fpiritual things, &c. He clofed his Sabbath-work in his family with finging Pfalm exxxiv. and after it a folemn bleffing of his family.

Thus was he prophet and prieft in his own houfe; and he was king there too, ruling in the fear of God, and not fuffering fin upon any under his roof.

He had many years ago a man-fervant that was once overtaken in drink abroad; for which, the next morning at family-worfhip, he folemnly reproved him, admonifhed him, and prayed for him with a fpirit of mecknefs, and foon after parted with him. But there were many that were his fervants, who, by the bleffing of God upon his endeavours, got thofe good impreffions upon their fouls which they retained ever after; and bleffed God with all their hearts that ever they came under his roof. Few went from his fervice till they were married, and went to families of their own; and fome, after they had been married and had buried their yoke-fellows, returned to his fervice again, faying, "Mafter, it is good to be here."

He brought up his children in the fear of God, with a great deal of care and tendernefs, and did by his practice, as well as upon all occafions in difcourfes, condemn the indifcretion of those parents who are partial in their affections to their children, making a difference ference between them, which he observed did often prove of ill confequence in families ; and lay a foundation of envy, contempt, and difcord, which turns to their fhame and ruin. His carriage towards his children was with great mildnefs and gentlenefs, as one who defir'd rather to be loved than feared by them. He was as careful not to provoke them to wrath, nor to difcourage them, as he was to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. He rul'd indeed, and kept up his authority, but it was with wifdom and love, and not with a high hand. He allowed his children a great degree of freedom with him, which gave him the opportunity of reafoning them, not frightning them, into that which is good. He did much towards the inftruction of his children in the way of familiar difcourfe, according to that excellent directory for religious education, Deut. vi. 7. Thou shalt whet these things (fo the word is, which he faid noted frequent repetition of the fame things) upon thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou fitteft in thy houfe, &c, which made them love home, and delight in his company, and greatly endeared religion to them.

He did not burthen his childrens memories by impofing upon them the getting of chapters and pfalms without book; but endeavoured to make the whole word of God familiar to them, (efpecially the fcripture ftories) and to bring them to underftand it and love it, and then they would eafily remember it. He ufed to obferve from Pfal. cxix. 93. "1 will never forget " thy precepts, for with them thou haft quickned me;" that we are then likely to remember the word of God when it doth us good.

He taught all his children to write himfelf, and fet them betimes to write fermons, and other things that might be of ufe to them. He taught his eldeft daughter the Hebrew tongue when fhe was about fix or feven years old, by an Englifh Hebrew grammar, which he made on purpofe for her; and fhe went fo far in it, as to be able readily to read and confirue a Hebrew pfalm. He drew up a fhort form of the baptismal covenant, for the use of his children; it was this:

I take God the Father to be my chiefest good, and highest end.

I take God the Son to be my Prince and Saviour.

I take God the Holy Ghoft to be my fanctifier, teacher, guide, and comforter.

I take the word of God to be my rule in all my actions, And the people of God to be my people in all conditions. I do likewife devote and dedicate unto the Lord, my whole felf, all I am, all I have, and all I can do. And this I do deliberately, fincerely, freely, and for ever."

This he taught his children, and they each of them folemnly repeated it every Lord's day in the evening, after they were catechized, he putting his Amen to it, and fometimes adding, "fo fay, and fo do, and you " are made for ever."

He alfo took pains with them, to lead them into the understanding of it, and to perfwade them to a free and cheerful confent to it. And when they grew up, he made them all write it over feverally with their own hands, and very folemnly fet their names to it, which he told them he would keep by him, and it should be produced as a testimony against them, in cafe they should afterwards depart from God, and turn from following after him.

He was careful to bring his children betimes (when they were about fixteen years of age) to the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, to take the covenant of God upon themfelves, and to make their dedication to God their own act and deed; and a great deal of pains he took with them, to prepare them for that great ordinance, and fo to transmit them into the ftate of adult church-membership: And he would often blame parents, who would think themfelves undone if they had not their children baptized, and yet took no care when they grew up and made a profession of the Christian religion religion, to perfwade them to the Lord's fupper. 'Tis true (he would fay) buds and bloffoms are not fruit, but they give hopes of fruit, and parents may and fhould take hold of the good beginnings of grace which they fee in their children, by those who bind them fo much the clofer to, and lead them fo much the fafter in the way that is called holy. By this folemn engagement the door which flood half open before, and invited the thief, is fhut and bolted against temptation. And to those who pleaded that they were not fit, he would fay, that the further they went into the world, the lefs fit they would be. Qui non eft hodie cras minus aptus erit. Not that children should be compell'd to it, nor those that are wilfully ignorant, untoward, and perverfe, admitted to it; but those children that are hopeful and well inclin'd to the things of God, and appear to be concern'd in other duties of religion, when they begin to put away childifh things, fhould be incited, and encouraged, and perfwaded to this, that the matter may be brought to an iffue. " Nay, but we " will ferve the Lord ;" fast bind, fast find. Abundant thankfgivings have been rendered to God by many of his friends for his advice and affiftance herein.

In dealing with his children about their fpiritual ftate, he took hold of them very much by the handle of their infant-baptifin, and frequently inculcated that upon them, that they were born in God's houfe, and were betimes dedicated and given up to him, and therefore were oblig'd to be his fervants, Pfal. cxvi. 16. I am thy fervant, becaufe the fon of thy handmaid. This he was wont to illustrate to them by the comparison of taking a leafe of a fair eftate for a child in the cradle, and putting his life into it; the child then knows nothing of the matter, nor is he capable of confenting; however, then he is maintained out of it, and hath an intereft in it; and when he grows up and becomes able to chuse, and refuse for himself, if he go to his landlord, and claim the benefit of the leafe, and promife to pay the rent, and do the fervices, well and good, good, he hath the benefit of it, if otherwife, it is at his peril. " Now, children, (would he fay) our great " Landlord was willing that your lives fhould be put " into the leafe of heaven and happinefs, and it was done " accordingly, by your baptifm, which is the feal of " the righteousness that is by faith; and by that it " was affur'd to you, that if you would pay the rent " and do the fervice, that is, live a life of faith and " repentance, and fincere obedience, you shall never " be turn'd off the tenement ; but if now you diflike the " terms, and refuse to pay this rent (this chief rent, " fo he would call it, for its no rack) you forfeit the " leafe; however, you cannot but fay, that you had a " kindnefs done you, to have your lives put into it." Thus did he frequently deal with his children, and even travel in birth again to fee Chrift formed in them, and from this topick he generally argued, and he would often fay, If infant baptifm were more improvcd, it would be lefs difputed.

He not only taught his children betimes to pray, (which he did efpecially by his own pattern, his method and expressions in prayer being very cafy and plain) but when they were young he put them upon it, to pray together, and appointed them on Saturdays in the afternoon to fpend fome time together; none but they and fuch of their age as might occasionally be with them, in reading good books, especially those for children, and in finging and praying; and would fometimes tell them for their encouragement, that the God with whom we have to do understands broken language. And if we do as well as we can in the fincerity of our hearts, we shall not only be accepted, but taught to do better: " to him that hath shall be given."

He fometimes fet his children, in their own reading of the Scriptures, to gather out fuch passages as they took most notice of, and thought most confiderable, and write them down : though this performance was very finall, yet the endeavour was of good ufc. He also directed them to infert in a paper book, which each each of them had for the purpofe, remarkable fayings, and ftories, which they met with in reading fuch other good books as he put into their hands.

He took a pleafure in relating to them the remarkable providences of God, both in his own time, and in the days of old, which he faid, parents were taught to do by that appointment, Exod. xii. 26, 27. Your children fhall afk you in time to come, What mean you by this fervice? and you fhall tell them fo and fo.

What his pious care was concerning his children, and with what a godly jealoufy he was jealous over them, take in one inftance :---when they had been for a week, or a fortnight, kindly entertained at B. (as they were often,) he thus writes in his diary upon their return home : " My care and fear is, left converfe with " fuch fo far above them, though of the beft, fhould " have influence upon them to lift them up, when I " had rather they fhould be kept low." For as he did not himfelf, fo he was very folicitous to teach his children, not to mind high things ; not to defire them, not to expect them in this world.

We fhall conclude this chapter with another paffage out of his diary, April 12. 1681. "This day four-"teen years the Lord took my firft-born fon from me, "the beginning of my ftrength, with a ftroke. In the "remembrance whereof my heart melted this even-"ing: I begg'd pardon for the Jonah that raifed the "ftorm; I bleffed the Lord that hath fpar'd the reft, "I begg'd mercy, mercy for every one of them, and abfolutely and unrefervedly devoted and dedicated "them, myfelf, my whole felf, eftate, intereft, and life, "to the will and fervice of that God from whom I "received all. Father, hallowed be thy name. Thy "kingdom come," &c.

CHAP. V.

His ejectment from Worthenbury, his Nonconformity, his removes to Broad Oak, and the providences that were concerning him to the year 1672.

H AVING thus laid together the inftances of his family-religion, we muft now return to the hiftory of events that were concerning him, and are obliged to look back to the firft year after his marriage, which was the year that king Charles the fecond came in; a year of great changes and ftruggles in the land, which Mr Baxter in his life gives a full and clear and impartial idea of; by which it may eafily be guefs'd how it went with Mr Henry in his low and narrow fphere, whofe fentiments in thofe things were very much the fame with Mr Baxter's.

Many of his best friends in Worthenbury parish were lately removed by death; Emeral family, contrary to what it had been; and the fame fpirit which that year reviv'd all the nation over, was working violently in that country, viz. a fpirit of great enmity to fuch men as Mr Henry was. Worthenbury, upon the king's coming in, returned into its former relation to Bangor, and was look'd upon as a chappelry dependent upon that. Mr Robert Fogg had for many years held the fequeftred rectory of Bangor, which now Dr Henry Bridgman (fon to John bishop of Chester, and brother to the Lord Keeper Bridgman) return'd to the poffeffion of. By which Mr Henry was foon apprehenfive that his intereft at Worthenbury was fliaken, but thus he writes : " The will of the Lord be done. Lord, if ", my work be done here, provide fome other for this " people that may be more skilful, and more fuccess-" ful, and cut out work for me elfewhere ; however, " I will take nothing ill which God doth with me."

He labour'd what he could to make Dr Bridgman his friend, who gave him good words, and was very civil to him, and affured him that he would never remove him till the law did. But he muft look on himfelf as the Doctor's curate, and depending upon his will, which kept him in continual expectation of a removal; however, he continued in his liberty there above a year, though in very fickle and precarious circumftances.

The grand question now on foot was, whether to conform or no. He us'd all means possible to fatisfy himfelf concerning it, by reading and difcourfe (particularly at Oxford with Dr Fell, afterwards bifhop of Oxford) but in vain, his diffatisfaction remain'd; "however, (faith he) I dare not judge those that do conform, for who am I that I should judge my brother ?" He hath noted, that being at Chefter, in difcourfe with the Dean and Chancellor and others, about this time, the great argument they used with him to perfwade him to conform was, that elfe he would lofe his preferment, and what (faid they) you are a young man, and are you wifer than the king and bifhops? But this is his reflection upon it afterwards, "God grant I " may never be left to confult with flesh and blood " in fuch matters."

In September 1660, Mr Fogg, and Mr Steel, and Mr Henry were prefented at Flint-affizes for not reading the common-prayer, though as yet it was not enjoin'd, but there were fome bufy people, that would out-run the law. They entered their appearance, and it fell; for foon after, the king's declaration, touching ecclefiaftical affairs, came out, which promifed liberty, and gave hopes of fettlement; but the fpring-affizes afterwards Mr Steel and Mr Henry were prefented again. On this he writes, "Be merciful to me, O God, for " man would fwallow me up. The Lord fhew me " what he would have me to do, for I am afraid of " nothing but fin."

It appears by the hints of his diary that he had melancholy apprehensions at this time about public affairs, feeing and hearing of fo many faithful ministers disturb'd, filenced and enfnar'd; the ways of Sion L 2 mourning, mourning, and the quiet in the land treated as the troublers of it; his foul wept in fecret for it. And yet he join'd in the annual commemoration of the king's reftoration, and preached on Mark xii. 17. "Render to Cæfar the things that are Cæfar's;" confidering (faith he) that it was his right; also the fad pofture of the civil government through ufurpers, and the manner of his coming in, without bloodfhed. This he would all his days fpeak of as a national mercy, but what he rejoiced in with a great deal of trembling for the Ark of God; and he would fometimes fay, That " during those years between forty and fixty, though on civil accounts there were great diforders, and the foundations were out of courfe, yet in the matters of God's worfhip, things went well; there was freedom and reformation, and a face of godliness was upon the nation, though there were those that made but a mafk of it. Ordinances were administred in power, and purity, and though there was much amifs, yet religion, at least in the profession of it, did prevail : This (faith he) we know very well, let men fay what they will of those times.

In November, 1660, he took the oath of allegiance at Orton, before Sir Thomas Hanmer, and two other Juffices, of which he hath left a memorandum in his diary, with this added, "God fo help me, as I purpofe " in my heart to do accordingly:" Nor could any more conficientioufly obferve that oath of God than he did, nor more fincerely promote the ends of it.

That year (according to an agreement with fome of his brethren in the ministry, who hoped thereby to oblige fome people) he preached upon Christmas-day. The fabbath before, it happen'd that the 23d chapter of Leviticus (which treats entirely of the Jewish feafts, called there the feafts of the Lord) came in course to be expounded, which gave him occasion to diftinguish of feafts into divine and ecclesiaftical; the divine feafts that the Jews had were those there appointed; their ecclesiaftical feafts were those of Purim and of deducacation:

cation: and in the application of it, he faid, "he knew no divine feaft we have under the gofpel but the Lord's day, intended for the commemoration of the whole mercy of our redemption. And the most that could be faid for Chriftmas was, that it is an ecclefia/tical feaft; and it is questionable with some, whether church or state, though they might make a good day, Efth. ix. 19. could make a holy day : neverthelefs, forafmuch as we find our Lord Jefus (Job x. 22.) fo far complying with the church feast of dedication, as to take occasion from the people's coming together, to preach to them, he purposed to preach upon Christmas day. knowing it to be his duty, in feafon and out of feafon." He preached on 1 John iii. 8. " For this purpofe was " the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy " the works of the devil." And he minded his people that it is double diffonour to Jefus Chrift, to practife the works of the devil then when we keep a feaft in memory of his manifestation.

His annuity from Emeral was now with-held becaufe he did not read the common prayer, (tho' as yet there was no law for reading of it) hereby he was difabled to do what he had been wont, for the help and relief of others; and this he has recorded as that which troubled him moft under that difappointment; but he bleffed God, that he had a heart to do good, even when his hand was empty.

When Emeral family was unkind to him, he reckoned it a great mercy, which he gave God thanks for, (who makes every creature to be that to us that it is) that Mr Broughton and his family (which is of confiderable figure in the parifh) continued their kindnefs and refpects to him, and their countenance of his miniftry, which he makes a grateful mention of, more than once in his diary.

Many attempts were made in the year 1661 to difturb and enfnare him, and it was ftill expected that he would have been hindred : " Methinks (faid he) " Sabbaths were never fo fweet as they are, now we " are kept at fuch uncertainties; now a day in thy " courts is better than a thoufand; fuch a day as this " (faith he of a Sacrament-day that year) better than " ten thoufand: O that we might yet fee many fuch " days."

He was advis'd by Mr Ratcliff of Chefter, and others of his friends, to enter an action against Mr P. for his annuity, and did fo; but concerning the fuccefs of it (faith he) "I am not over folicitous; for tho' it be my due, (Luke x. 7.) yet it was not that which I preached for; and God knows I would much rather preach for nothing, than not at all; and befides, I know affuredly, if I should be cast, God would make it up to me fome other way." After fome proceedings, he not only mov'd, but folicited Mr P. to refer it ; " ha-" ving learned (faith he) that it is no difparagement, " but an honour, for the party wrong'd to be first in " feeking reconciliation; the Lord, (if it be his will) " incline his heart to peace. I have now two great " concerns upon the wheel, one in reference to my " maintenance for time paft; the other as to my con-" tinuance for the future ; the Lord be my friend in " both ; but of the two, rather in the latter. But ma-" ny of greater gifts and grace than I are laid afide " already, and when my turn comes I know not, the " will of God be done : He can do his work with-" out us."

The iffue of this affair was, that there having been fome difputes between Mr P. and Dr Bridgman, about the tithe of Worthenbury, wherein Mr P. had clearly the better claim to make, yet, by the mediation of Sir Tho. Hanmer, they came to this agreement, Sept. 11. 1661. that Dr Bridgman and his fucceflors, parfons of Bangor, fhould have and receive all the tithe-corn and hay of Worthenbury, without the diffurbance of the faid Mr P. or his heirs (except the tithe-hay of Emeral Demefn) upon condition that Dr Bridgman fhould, before the first of November following, avoid and difcharge the prefent minister, or curate, Philip Henry, from from the chapel of Worthenbury, and not hereafter at any time re-admit the faid minister, Philip Henry, to officiate the faid cure. This is the fubftance of the articles agreed upon between them, purfuant to which, Dr Bridgman foon after difmifs'd Mr Henry; and by a writing under his hand, which was published in the church of Worthenbury, by one of Mr Pulefton's fervants, October the 27th following, notice was given to the parifh of that difmiffion. That day he preached his farewell fermon on Phil. i. 27. " only let your " converfation be as becomes the gofpel of Chrift." In which (as he faith in his diary) his defire and defign was rather to profit than to affect ; it matters not what becomes of me (whether I come unto you, or elfe be abfent) but let your conversation be as becomes the gofpel. His parting prayer for them was, " the " Lord, the God of the fpirits of all flefh, fet a man " over the congregation." Thus he ceafed to preach to his people there, but he ceafed not to love them, and pray for them; and could not but think there remained fome dormant relation betwixt him and them.

As to the arrears of his annuity from Mr P. when he was difplaced; after fome time Mr P. was willing to give him 100% which was a good deal lefs than what was due, upon condition that he would furrender his deed of annuity, and his leafe of the houfe, which he for peace fake was willing to do, and fo he loft all the benefit of judge Pulefton's great kindnefs to him. This was not compleated till Sept. 1662. until which time he continued in the houfe at Worthenbury, but never preached fo much as once in the church, tho' there were vacancies feveral times.

Mr R. Hilton was immediately put into the curacy of Worthenbury, by Dr Bridgman: Mr Henry went to hear him while he was at Worthenbury, and join'd in all the parts of the public worfhip, particularly attending upon the Sacrament of baptifm; "not daring (faith he) to turn my back upon God's ordinance, while the effentials of it are retained, tho' corrupted circumcircumftantially in the administration of it, which God amend." Once being allow'd the liberty of his gefture, he join'd in the Lord's Supper. He kept up his correspondence with Mr Hilton, and (as he faith in his diary) endeavour'd to posses him with right thoughts of his work, and advis'd him the best he could in the foul affairs of that people; "which (faith he) he feemed to take well; I am fure I meant it fo, and the Lord make him faithful."

Immediately after he was removed and filenced at Worthenbury, he was folicited to preach at Bangor, and Dr Bridgman was willing to permit it, occafionally, and intimated to his curate there, that he fhould never hinder it; but Mr Henry declin'd it: though his filence was his great grief, yet fuch was his tendernefs, that he was not willing fo far to difcourage Mr Hilton at Worthenbury, nor to draw fo many of the people from him as would certainly have followed him to Bangor: " but (faith he) I cannot get my heart into fuch a fpiritual frame on Sabbath-days now, as formerly; which is both my fin and my affliction. Lord, quicken me with quickening grace."

When the king came in first, and shewed fo good a temper, as many thought, some of his friends were very earness with him to revive his acquaintance and interess at court, which it was thought he might easily do. 'Twas reported in the country, that the Duke of York had enquired after him; but he heeded not the report, nor would he be perfwaded to make any address that way: "for (faith he) my friends do not know fo well as I the strength of temptation, and my own inability to deal with it." Qui bene latuit, benevixit; Lord, lead me not into temptation.

He was greatly affected with the temptations and afflictions of many faithful Ministers of Christ at this time, by the prefling of conformity; and kept many private days of fasting and prayer in his own house at Worthenbury, feeking to turn away the wrath of God from the Land. He greatly pitied fome, who by the urgency urgency of friends, and the fear of want, were overperfwaded to put a force upon themfelves in their conformity. The Lord keep me (faith he) in the critical time.

He preached fometimes occafionally in divers neighbouring places, till Bartholomew-day, 1662; "the day (faith he) which our fins have made one of the faddeft days to England fince the death of Edward the VI. but even this for good," though we know not how nor which way. He was invited to preach at Bangor on the black Bartholomew-day, and prepared a fermon on John vii. 37. "In the laft day, that "great day of the feaft," &c. but was prevented from preaching it, and was loth to ftrive against fo ftrong a ftream.

As to his non-conformity, which fome of his worft enemies have faid was his only fault, it may not be amifs here to give fome account of it.

1. His reasons for his non-conformity were very confiderable. 'Twas no rafh act, but deliberate and well weigh'd in the balances of the fanctuary. He could by no means fubmit to be re-ordain'd ; fo well fatisfied was he in his call to the ministry, and his folemn ordination to it, by the laying on of the hands of the prefbytery, which God had gracioufly own'd him in, that he durft not do that which looked like a renunciation of it, as null and finful, and would be at leaft a tacit invalidating and condemning of all his administrations. Nor could he truly fay, that he thought himfelf moved by the Holy Ghoft to take upon him the office of a Deacon. He was the more confirmed in this objection, becaufe the then Bishop of Chester, Dr Hall, (in whofe diocefe he was) befides all that was required by law, exacted from those that came to him to be re-ordained, a fubscription to this form :---" Ego " A. B. prætenfas meas ordinationis literas, a quibuf-" dam presbyteris olim obtentas jam penitus renuncio, " & dimitto pro vanis; humiliter fupplicans quatenus " Rev. in Chrifto Pater, & Dominus Georgius permissione M

" miffione divina Ceftr. Epifc. me ad facrum diacona-" tus ordinem juxta morem & ritus Ecclefiæ Angli-" canæ dignaretur admittere." This of re-ordination was the first and great bar to his conformity, and which he mostly infisted on. He would fometimes fay, that for a Prefbyter to be ordain'd a Deacon, is at best, " fuscipere gradum Simeonis."

Befides this, he was not at all fatisfied to give his unfeigned affent and confent, to all and every thing contained in the book of Common-Praver, &c. for he thought that thereby he fhould receive the book itfelf, and every part thereof, rubrics and all, both as true and good; whereas there was feveral things which he could not think to be fo. The exceptions which the ministers made against the liturgy, at the Savoy conference, he thought very confiderable; and could by no means submit to, much less approve of, the impofition of the ceremonies: He often faid, that when Chrift came to free us from the yoke of one ceremonial law, he did not leave it in the power of any man, or company of men, in the world, to lay another unon our necks. Kneeling at the Lord's Supper he was much diffatisfied about; and it was for many years his great grief, and which in his diary he doth often most pathetically lament; that by it he was debarred from partaking of that ordinance, in the folenun affembly : for, to fubmit to that imposition, he thought, whatever it was to others, (whom he was far from judging) would be fin to him. He never took the covenant, nor ever expressed any fonduess for it; and yet he could not think, and therefore durft not declare that (however unlawfully impos'd,) it was in itfelf an unlawful oath, and that no perfon that took it was under the obligation of it : For fometimes " quod " fieri non debuit factum valet." In fhort, it cannot be wondered at, that he was a non-conformifl, when the terms of conformity were fo industriously contrived to keep out of the church fuch men as he; which is manifest by the full account which Mr Baxter hath left left to pofterity of that affair; and it is a paffage worth noticing here, which Dr Bates, in his funeral fermon on Mr Baxter, relates; that when the Lord Chamberlain, Manchefter, told the king, (while the act of uniformity was under debate) that he was afraid that the terms were fo hard, that many of the minifters would not comply with them; Bifhop Sheldon being prefent, replied, I am afraid they will. And it is well known how many of the most fober, pious, and laborious minifters, in all parts of the nation, conformifts as well non-conformiits did diflike those impositions.

The Life of Mr Philip Henry.

He thought it a mercy (fince it must be fo) that the cafe of non-conformity was made fo clear as it was, abundantly to fatisfy him in his filence and fufferings. I have heard that Mr Anthony Burges, who hefitated before, when he read the act, bleffed God that the matter was put out of doubt. And yet to make fure work, the printing and publishing of the new book of Common-Prayer was fo deferred, that few of the ministers, except those in London, could possibly get a fight of it, much less duly confider of it before the time prefixed; which Mr Steel took notice of in his farewell-fermon at Hanmer, Aug. 17. 1662, That he was filenced and turned out, for not declaring his unfeigned aisent and confent to a book which he never faw nor could fee.

One thing which he comforted himfelf with in his non-conformity was, that as to matters of doubtful difputation touching church-government, ceremonies, and the like, he was unfworn, either on the one fide or the other, and fo was free from those finares and bands in which fo many find themfelves both tied up from what they would do, and entangled that they knew not what to do. He was one of those that fear'd an oath, Eccl. x. 2. and would often fay, Oaths are edg'd tools, and not to be played with. One paffage 1 find in his papers, which confirmed him in this fatisfaction; 'tis a letter from no lefs a clergyman than Dr F. of Whitchurch to one of his parishioners, who defired M 2 him to give way that his child might be baptifed by another without the crofs and godfathers, if he would not do it fo himfelf; both which he refused : 'Twas in the year 1672-3. "For my part, (faith the Doctor) " I freely profess my thoughts, that the strict urging " of indifferent ceremonies, hath done more harm than " good; and poffibly (had all men been left to their " liberty therein) there might have been much more " unity, and not much lefs uniformity. But what " power have I to difpenfe with myfelf, being now " under the obligation of a law and an oath?" And he concludes, "I am much grieved at the unhappy con-" dition of myfelf, and other minilters, who must ei-" ther lose their parishioners love, if they do not com-" ply with them, or elfe break their folemn obliga-" tions to pleafe them."

This he would fay was the mifchief of impofitions, which ever were, and ever will be bones of contention. When he was at Worthenbury, though in the Lord's Supper he ufed the gefture of fitting himfelf, yet he administered it without feruple to fome who chofe rather to kneel; and he thought that minister's hands should not, in fuch things be tied up; but that he ought in his place, (though he fuffered for it,) to witnefs against the making of those things the indifpensable terms of communion, which Jefus Christ hath not made to be fo. "Where the Spirit of the "Lord, and the spirit of the gospel is, there is liber-"ty."

Such as thefe were the reafons of his non-conformity, which, as long as he lived, he was more and more confirm'd in.

2. His moderation in his non-conformity was very exemplary and eminent, and had a great influence upon many, to keep them from running into an uncharitable and fchilmatical feparation; which, upon all occafions, he bore his teflimony againft, and was very industrious to ftem the tide of. In church-government, that which he defired and wifhed for, was Archbifhop Uther's

Ufher's reduction of Epifcopacy. He thought it lawful to join in the common prayer in public affemblies, and practifed accordingly, and endeavoured to fatisfy others concerning it. The fpirit he was of, was fuch as made him much afraid of extremes, and folicitous for nothing more than to maintain and keep Chriftian love and charity among profeffors : We fhall meet with feveral inftances of this, in the progrefs of his flory, and therefore wave it here. I have been told of an aged minifter of his acquaintance, who being afked upon his death-bed, What his thoughts were of his non-conformity? replied, He was well fatisfied in it, and fhould not have conformed fo far as he did, (viz. to join in the liturgy,) if it had not been for Mr Henry. Thus was his moderation known unto all men.

But to proceed in his flory :--- at Michaelmas 1662, he quite left Worthenbury, and came with his family to Broad-Oak, just nine years from his first coming into the country. Being caft by divine Providence into this new place and flate of life, his care and prayer was, that he might have grace and wildom to manage it to the glory of God, which (faith he) is my chief end. Within three weeks after his coming hither, his fecond fon was born, which we mention for the fake of the remark he has upon it :----" We have no reafon (faith he) to call him Benoni, I with we had none to call him Ichabod." And on the day of his familythankfgiving for that mercy, he writes, " We have " reafon to rejoice with trembling, for it goes ill with " the church and people of God, and reafon to fear " worfe, becaufe of our fins, and our enemies wrath."

At the latter end of this year he hath in his diary this note: " It is obferved of many who have con-" formed of late, and fallen from what they formerly " profeffed, that, fince their fo doing, from unblam-" able, orderly, pious men, they are become exceed-" ing diffolute and profane, and inftanceth in fome. " What need have we every day to pray, Lord, lead " us not into temptation."

For feveral years after he came to live at Broad-Oak, he went conftantly on the Lord's day to the. public worthip, with his family, at Whitewell-chapel, (which is hard by) if there were any fupply there, as fometimes there was from Malpas; and if none, then to Tylftock, (where Mr Zachary Thomas continued for about half a year, and the place was a little fanctuary,) and when that ftring fail'd, ufually to Whitchurch; and did not preach for a great while, unlefs occafionally, when he visited his friends, or to his own family on Lord's days, when the weather hindred them from going abroad. He comforted himfelf, that fometime in going in public, he had opportunity of inftructing and exhorting those that were in company with him, by the way, according as he faw they had need ; and in this his lips fed many, and his tongue was as choice filver; and he acted according to that rule which he often laid down to himfelf and others, That when we cannot do what we would, we must do what we can, and the Lord will accept us in it. He made the best of the fermous he heard in public. It is a mercy (faith he) we have bread, though it be not as it hath been, of the finest of the wheat. Those are froward children who throw away the meat they have, if it be wholefome, becaufe they have not what they would have. When he met with preaching that was weak, his note is, That's a poor fermon indeed, out of which no good leffon may be learned. He had often occasion to remember that verse of Mr Herbert's,

" The worft fpeaks fomething good, if all want fenie, God takes the text, and preacheth patience."

Nay, and once he faith, he could not avoid thinking of Eli's fons, who made the facrifices of the Lord to be abhorred: yet he went to bear his teltimony to public ordinances; "For ftill (faith he) the Lord loves "the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of "Jacob," and fo do I. Such then were his fentiments of things, expecting that God would yet open a door a door of return to former public liberty, which he much defired and prayed for, and in hopes of that, was backward to fall into the flated exercise of his miniftry otherwife, (as were all the fober non-conformifts generally in those parts,) but it was his grief and burthen, that he had not an opportunity of doing more for God. He had fcarce one talent of opportunity, but that one he was very diligent and faithful in the improvement of. When he visited his friends, how did he lay out himfelf to do them good ? Being afked once, (where he made a vifit,) to expound and pray, which his friends returned him thanks for; he thus writes upon it, " They cannot thank me fo much for " my pains, but I thank them more, and my Lord "God efpecially, for the opportunity." Read his conflict with himfelf at this time : "I own myfelf a mi-" nifter of Chrift, yet do nothing as a minifter; what " will excufe me ! Is it enough for me to fay, Behold, " I ftand in the market-place, and no man hath hired " me?" And he comforts himfelf with this appeal, " Lord, thou knoweft what will I have to thy work, " public or private, if I had a call and opportunity;" and shall this willing mind be accepted ? Surely this is a melancholy confideration, and lays a great deal of blame fomewhere, that fuch a man as Mr Henry, fo well qualified with gifts and graces for minifterial work, and in the prime of his time for ulcfulnefs; fo found and orthodox, fo humble and modelt, fo quiet and peaceable, fo pious and blamelefs, flould be fo industriously thrust out of the vineyard, as a useles and unprofitable fervant, and laid afide as a defpifed broken veffel, and a veffel in which there was no pleafore. This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation; especially fince it was not his cafe alone, but the lot of fo many hundreds of the fame character.

In these circumstances of filence and reftraint, he took comfort himself, and administered comfort to others from that Scripture, Ifa. xvi. 4. " Let my out-" cafts dwell with thee, Meab." God's people may be

be an out-cast people, cast out of men's love, their fynagogues, their country; but God will own his people when men caft them out; they are out-cafts, but they are his, and fomewhere or other he will provide a dwelling for them. There were many worthy, able minifters, thereabouts turn'd out, both from work and fubfiltence, that had not fuch comfortable fupport for the life that now is, as Mr Henry had, for whom he was most affectionately concerned, and to whom he fhewed much kindnefs. There were computed, within a few miles round him, fo many ministers turned out to the wide world, ftript of all their maintenance, and exposed to continual hardships, as with their wives and children, (having most of them numerous families,) made up above a hundred, that lived upon Providence; and though often reduced to wants and ftraits, yet were not forfaken, but were enabled to rejoice in the Lord, and to joy in the God of their falvation notwithstanding: to whom the promife was fulfilled, Pfal. xxxvii. 3. " So fhalt thou dwell in the " land, and verily thou fhalt be fed." The world was told long fince, by the conformifts plea, that the worthy Mr Lawrence, (Mr Henry's intimate friend) when he was turned out of Bafchurch, and (if he wouldhave confulted with flefh and blood) having (as was faid of one of the martyrs) eleven good arguments against fuffering, viz. a wife and ten children, was afked how he meant to maintain them all, and cheerfully replied, they must all live on the vi. of Matthew, " Take no thought for your life," &c. and he often fung with his family Pfal. xxxvii. 16. And Mr Henry hath noted concerning him in his diary, fome time after he was turn'd out, that he bore witnefs to the love and care of our heavenly Father, providing for him and his in his prefent condition, beyond expectation.

One obfervation Mr Henry made not long before he died, when he had been young and now was old, that though many of the ejected ministers were brought very very low, had many children, were greatly harraffed by perfecution, and their friends generally poor and unable to fupport them; yet in all his acquaintance he never knew, nor could remember to have heard, of any non-conformift minifter in prifon for debt.

In October 1663, Mr Steel and Mr Henry, and fome other of their friends, were taken up and brought prisoners to Hanmer, under pretence of fome plot faid to be on foot against the Government; and there they were kept under confinement fome days, on which he writes, " It is fweet being in any condition with a clear conficence : The fting of death is fin, and fo of imprifonment alfo. 'Tis the first time I was ever a prisoner, but perhaps may not be the laft. We felt no hardship, but we know not what we may." They were, foon after, examined by the deputy licutenants, charged with they knew not what, and fo difinified, finding verbal fecurity to be forthcoming upon twenty-four hours notice whenever they fhould be called for. Mr Henry returned to his tabernacle with thankfgivings to God, and a hearty prayer for his enemies, that God would forgive them. The very next day after they were releafed, a great man in the country, at whofe infligation they were brought into that trouble, died (as was faid) of a drunken furfeit. So that a man fhall fay, " Verily there is a God that judgeth " in the earth."

In the beginning of the year 1665, when the act for a royal aid to his Majelty of two millions and a half came out, the commissioners for Flintshire were pleafed to nominate Mr. Henry fub-collector of the faid tax for the township of Hcoyd, and Mr Steel for the township of Hanmer. They intended thereby to put an affront and disparagement upon their minission, and to shew that they looked upon them but as lay-men; his note upon it is, " It is not a fin which they put us upon, but it is a cross, and a cross in our way, and therefore to be taken up and borne with patience. When I had better work to do, I was wanting in my duty about N - it, and now this is put upon me, the Lord is righteous." He procured the gathering of it by others, only took account of it, and faw it duly done; and deferved (as he faid he hop'd he fhould) that infcription mentioned in Suetonius, To the memory of an honeft Publican.

In September the fame year he was again, by warrant from the deputy lieutenants, fetched prifoner to Hanmer, as was also Mr Steel and others. He was examined about private meetings: fome fuch (but private indeed) he own'd he had been prefent at of late in Shropshire, but the occasion was extraordinary; the plague was at that time raging in London, and he, and feveral of his friends, having near relations there, thought it time to feek the Lord for them, and this was imputed to him as his crime. He was likewife charged with administring the Lord's Supper, which he denied, having never administred it fince he was difabled by the act of Uniformity. After fome days confinement, feeing they could prove nothing upon him, he was discharged upon recognizance of 201. with two fureties to be forthcoming upon notice, and to live peaceably. But (faith he) our reftraint was not ftrict, for we had liberty of prayer and conference together, to our mutual edification : Thus, " out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the ftrong, fweet-" nefs;" and we found honey in the carcale of the lion. It was but a little before this that Mr Steel, fetting out for London, was, by a warrant from the juffices, under colour of the report of a plot, ftopped and fearched, and finding nothing to accufe him of, they feized his almanack, in which he kept his diary for that year; and it not being written very legibly, they made what malicious readings and comments they pleafed upon it, to his great wrong and reproach; though, to all fober and fenfible people, it difcovered him to be a man that kept a ftrict watch over his own heart, and was a a great hufband of his time, and many faid they got good by it, and fhould love him the better for it, Pfal. xxxvii. 5, 6. This event made Mr Henry fomewhat morè more cautious and fparing in the records of his diary, when he faw how evil men dig up mifchief.

At Lady-day, 1666, the five-mile act commenced, by which all non-conformilt ministers were forbidden, upon pain of fix months imprifonment, to come or be within five miles of any corporation, or of any place where they had been ministers, unless they would take an oath; of which Mr Baxter faith, 'twas credibly reported, that the Earl of Southampton, then Lord high treafurer of England, faid, No honeft man could take it. Mr Baxter, in his Life, hath fet down at large, his reafons against taking this Oxford-oath, as it was called, part ii. p. 396, &c. part iii. p. 4, &c. Mr Henry fet his down in thort, 'Twas an oath, not at any time to endeavour any alteration of the government in the church or state. He had already taken an oath of allegiance to the King, and he looked upon this to amount to an oath of allegiance to the bilhops, which he was not free to take. Thus he writes, March 22, 1665-6:

" This day methoughts it was made more clear to " me than ever, by the hand of my God upon me, and " I note it down, that I may remember it. (1.) That " the government of the church of Chrift ought to " be managed by the ministers of Christ." It appears, Heb. xiii. 7. that they are to rule us that fpeak to us the word of God. "(2.) That, under prelacy, ministers have not the management of church-go-66 vernment, not in the leaft, being only the publish-66 " ers of the prelates decrees, as in excommunication and abfolution, which decrees fometimes are given " (3.) That therefore " forth by lay-chancellors. prelacy is an ulurpation in the church of God, u-66 " pon the crown and dignity of Jelus Chrift, and u-" pon the gofpel-rights of his fervants the minifters. 64 And therefore, (4.) 1 ought not to fubfcribe to it, " nor to fwear not to endeavour, in all lawful ways, " the alteration of it, viz. by praying and perfwading, " where there is opportunity. Eur, (5.) That I may fafely  $N \sim$

" fafely venture to fuffer in the refulal of fuch an oath," committing my foul, life, eftate, libertý, all to Him" who judgeth righteoufly."

And on March 25, the day when that act took place, he thus writes : " A fad day among poor minifters up " and down this nation ; who, by this act of reftraint, " are forced to remove from among their friends, ac-" quaintance, and relations, and to fojourn among " ftrangers, as it were in Mefech and in the tents of " Kedar. But there is a God who tells their wan-" drings, and will put their tears, and the tears of their " wives and children into his bottle ; are they not in " his book? The Lord be a little fanctuary to them, " and a place of refuge from the ftorm, and from the " tempeft ; and pity thofe places from which they are " ejected, and come and dwell where they may not."

He wished their removes might not be figurative of evil to these nations, as Ezekiel's were, Ezek. xii. 1, 2, 3. This fevere dispensation forced Mr Steel and his family from Hanmer, and so he loss the comfort of his neighbourhood; but withal it drew Mr Laurence from Buschurch to Whitchurch parish, where he continued till he was driven thence too.

Mr Henry's houfe at Broad-Oak was but four computed miles from the utmost limits of Worthenbury parish, but he got it measured, and accounting 1760 vards to a mile faccording to the Statute 35 Eliz. cap. 6.) it was found to be just five miles and threefcore vards, which one would think might have been his fecurity : but there were those near him who were ready to ftretch fuch laws to the utmost rigor, unfer pretence of conftruing them in favour of the King, and therefore would have it be underftood of computed miles. This obliged him for fome time to leave his family, and to fojourn among his friends, to whom he endeavoured, where-ever he came, to impart fome fpiritual gift. At lafthe ventured home; prefuming, among other things, that the warrant by which he was made collector of the royal aid, while that continued, would fecure him, according according to a proviso in the last clause of the act, which, when the gentlemen perceived, they discharged him from that office before he had served out the time.

He was much affected with it, that the burning of London happened fo foon after the non-conformifts were banifhed out of it. He thought it was in mercy to them that they were removed before that defolating judgment came, but that it fpoke aloud to our governors, " Let my people go, that they may ferve " me; and if ye will not, behold thus and thus will I " do unto you." This was the Lord's voice crying in the city.

In the beginning of the year 1667, he removed with his family to Whitchurch, and dwelt there above a year, except that for one quarter of a year, about harveft, he returned again to Broad-Oak. His remove to Whitchurch was partly to quiet his adverfaries, who were ready to quarrel with him upon the five-mile act, and partly for the benefit of the fchool there for his children.

There, in April following, he buried his eldeft fon, not quite fix years old, a child of extraordinary pregnancy and forwardnefs in learning, and of a very towardly difposition : his character of this child is,

. Præterque aelatem nil puerile fuit.

This child, before he was feized with the ficknefs whereof he died, was much affected with fome verfes, which he met with in Mr White's Power of Godlinefs, faid to be found in the pocket of a hopeful young man, who died before he was twenty-four years old. Of his own accord he got them without book, and would be often rehearfing them, they were thefe:

> Not twice twelve years (he might fay Not half twelve years) full told, a wearied breath I have exchanged for a happy death. Short was my life; the longer is my reft, God takes them fooneft whom he loveth beft.

He that is born to-day, and dies to-morrow, Lofes fome hours of joy, but months of forrow; Other difeafes often come to grive us, Death firikes but once, and that firoke doth relieve us.

This was a great affliction to the tender parents : Mr Henry writes upon it in the reflection,

Quicquid amas cupias non placuiffe nimis.

Many years after, he faid, he thought he did apply to himfelf at that time, but too fenfibly, that fcripture, Lam. iii. 1. "I am the man that hath feen affliction." And he would fay to his friends upon fuch occasions, " Lofers think they may have leave to fpeak, but they " must have a care what they fay, left, fpeaking amits " to God's diffionour, they make work for repentance, " and fhed tears that muft be wept over again." He observed concerning this child, that he had always been very patient under rebukes, "The remembrance of which (faith he) teacheth me now how to carry it under the rebukes of my heavenly Father." His prayer under this providence was, "Shew me, Lord, fhew me wherefore thou contendest with me; have I overboafted, over-lov'd, over-priz'd?" A Lord's day intervening between the death and burial of the child, " I attended (faith he) on publick ordinances, though fad in fpirit, as Job, who, after all the evil tidings that were brought him, whereof death of children was the laft and heavieft, yet fell down and worfhipped." And he would often fay upon fuch occasions, that weeping must not hinder fowing. Upon the interment of the child, he writes, "Ny dear child, now mine no longer, was laid in the cold earth; not loft, but fown to be raifed again a glorious body, and I fhall go to him, but he shall not return to me." A few days after, his dear friend Mr Lawrence (then living in Whitchurch parifh) buried a daughter, that was grown up and very hopeful, and gave good evidence of a work of grace wrought upon her foul: How willing (faith he) may parente be to part with fuch when the Lord calls : they . are are not amiffi but praemiffi. And he hath this further remark, "The Lord hath made his poor fervants, that have been often companions in his work, now companions in tribulation, the very fame tribulation; me for my fin, him for his trial."

While he liv'd at Whitchurch, he attended conftantly upon the publick miniftry, and there (as ever) he was careful to come to the beginning of the fervice, which he attended upon with reverence and devotion; ftanding all the time, even while the chapters were read. In the evening of the Lord's day, he fpent fome time in inftructing his family, to which a few of his friends and neighbours in the town would fometimes come in ; and it was a little gleam of opportunity, but very fhort, for (as he notes) "He was offended at it, who fhould rather have rejoiced, if by any means the work might be carried on in his people's fouls."

He observes in his diary this year, how zealous people had generally been for the observation of Lent a while ago, and how cold they are towards it now. The fame he notes of processions in ascension-week; for (faith he) what hath no good foundation will not hold up long; but in that which is duty, and of God, it is good to be zealously affected always.

In this year (I think) was the first time that he adminiftred the Lord's Supper (very privately to be fure) after he was filenced by the act of uniformity, and he did not do it without mature deliberation. A fear of feparation kept him from it fo long ; what induced him to it at last, I find thus under his own hand : "I am a minister of Christ, and as fuch I am obliged, Virtute efficii, by all means to endeavour the good of fouls. Now here's a company of ferious Chriftians, whofe lot is caft to live in a parish where there is one fet over them who preacheth the truth; and they come to hear him, and join with him in other parts of worthip; only as to the Lord's Supper; they fcruple the lawfulnefs of the geflure of kneeling; and he tells them, his hands are tied, and he cannot administer it unto them any other other way; wherefore they come to me, and tell me, they earneftly long for that ordinance; and there is a competent number of them, and opportunity to partake; and how dare I deny this requeft of theirs, without betraying my ministerial truft, and incurring the guilt of a grievous omiffion."

In February 1667-8, Mr Laurence and he were invited by fome of their friends to Betley in Staffordfhire, and (there being fome little public connivance at that time) with the confent of all concerned, they adventured to preach in the church, one in the morning, and the other in the afternoon of the Lord's day, very peaceably and profitably. This action of theirs was prefently after reported in the Houfe of Commons by a member of Parliament, with these additions, that they tore the common-prayer book, trampled the furplice under rtheir feet, pull'd the minister of the place out of the pulpit, &c. Reports which there was not the leaft colour for. But that, with fome other fuch like falfe ftories, produced an address of the House of Commons to the King, to iffue out a proclamation, for the putting of the laws in execution against papifts and nonconformifts, which was iffued out accordingly; though the King, at the opening of that feffion, a little before, had declared his defire, that fome courfe might be taken to compose the minds of his protestant subjects in matters of religion; which had raifed the expectations of fome, that there would be fpeedy enlargement; but Mr Henry had noted upon it, " We cannot expect too little from man, nor too much from GOD."

And here it may be very pertinent to obferve, how industrious Mr Henry was at this time, when he and his friends fuffered fuch hard things from the government, to preferve and promote a good affection to the government notwithstanding. It was commonly charged at that time upon the non-conformists in general, efpecially from the pulpits, that they were all a factious and turbulent people, and, as was faid of old, Ezra iv. 16, "hurtful to Kings and provinces;" that their meetings

meetings were for the fowing of fedition and difcontents, and the like; and there is fome reafon to think, that one thing intended by the hardfhips put upon them was to drive them to this. There is a way of making a wife man mad. But how peaceably they carried themfelves, is manifelt to God, and in the confciences of many. For an inftance of it, it will not be amifs to give fome account of a fermon which Mr Henry preached in folme very private meetings, fuch as were called feditious conventicles, in the year 1069, when it was a day of treading down, and of perplexity; it was on that text, Pial. xxxv. 20. " Against them that " are quiet in the land ;" whence (not to curry favour with rulers, for whatever the fermon was, the very preaching of it, had it been known, must have been feverely punished, but purely out of confcience towards God) he taught his friends this doctrine, " That it is the character of the people of God, that 7 they are a quiet people in the land." " This quietness " he defcribed to be an orderly, peaceable fubjection " to governors and government in the Lord. We muft " maintain a reverent effeem of them, and of their " authority, in opposition to defpising dominion, 2 " Pet. ii. 10.; we must be meek under fevere com-" mands, and burthenfome impofitions, not murmur-" ing and complaining, as the Ifraelites against Mofes 66 and Aaron; but take them up as our crofs in our 66 way, and bear them as we do foul weather. We 55 must not speak evil of dignities, Jude, ver. 3.; nor " revile the gods, Exod. xxii. 28. Paul checked him-66 felf for this, Acts xxiii. 5. I did not confider it, if 66 I had, I would not have faid fo. We must not tra-66 duce their government as Absalom did David's, 2 ٤2 Sam. xv. 3. Great care is to be taken, how we fpeak " of the faults of any, especially of rulers, Eccl. x. 20....The people of God do make the word of God 66 " their rule, and by that they are taught, (1.) that " magistracy is God's ordinance, and magistrates " God's ministers ; that by Him kings reign, and the DOW:13

" viii. 2.; the oath of allegiance is an oath of quiet-" nefs: and we must beware of the company and " converse of those that are unquiet, Prov. xxii. 24, " 25. Tho' deceitful matters be devis'd, yet we must " be quiet still; nay, be fo much the more quiet."

I have been this large in gathering thefe hints out of that fermon, (which he took all occasions in other fermons to inculcate, as all his brethren likewife did) that if possible it may be a conviction to the prefent generation; neration; or however, may be a witnefs in time to come, that the non-conformift minifters were not enemies to Cæfar, nor troublers of the land; nor their meetings any way tending to the difturbance of the publick peace, but purely defign'd to help to repair the decays of Chriftian piety.

All that knew Mr Henry, knew very well that his practice all his days was conformant to thefe his fettled principles.

In May, 1668, he return'd again with his family from Whitchurch to Broad-Oak, which, through the good hand of his God upon him, continued his fettled home, without any remove from it, till he was removed to his long home above twenty-eight years after.

The edge of the five-mile act began now a little to rebate, at least in that country; and he was defirous to be more useful to the neighbours, among whom God had given him an eftate, than he could be at a diftance from them by relieving the poor, employing the labourers, and efpecially inftructing the ignorant, and helping as many as he could to heaven. He made that fcripture his flanding rule, and wrote it in the beginning of his book of accounts, Prov. iii. 9, 10. " Honour the Lord with thy fubstance, &c." And having fet apart a day of fecret prayer and humiliation, to beg of God a wife and understanding heart, and to drop a tear (as he expressed it) over the fins of his predeceffors, formerly in that eftate, he laid out himfelf very much in doing good. He was very ferviceable upon all accounts in the neighbourhood, and tho' it took up a great deal of his time, and hindred him from his beloved studies, yet it might be faid of him, as the Bifhop of Salisbury faith of Archbifhop Tillotfon, in his fermon at his funeral, that he " chofe rather to " live to the good of others than to himfelf; and " thought, that to do an act of charity, or even of " tenderness and kindness, was of more value both in " itfelf, and in the fight of God, than to purfue the · pompous  $O_2$

" pompous parts of learning, how much foever his " own genius might lead him to it."

He was very useful in the common concernments of the township and country, in which he was a very prudent counfelior; it was indeed a narrow fphere of activity, but fuch as it was) to him as to Job xxix. 21, 22. " Men gave ear and waited, and kept filence at his counfel; after his words they fpake not again;" and nony of the neighbours who respected him not as a minister, yet lov'd and honour'd him as a knowing, prudent, and humble neighbour. In the concernments of private families, he was very far from bufying himfelf, and further from feeking himfelf, but he was very much bufied, advifing many about their affairs, and the difpofal of themfelves and their children, arbitrating and composing differences among relations and neighbours, in which he had an excellent faculty, and often good fuccefs, inheriting the bleffing entail'd upon the peace-makers. References have fometimes been made to him by rule of court, at the affizes, with conient of parties. He was very affable and eafy of accefs, and admirably patient in hearing every one's complaint, which he would anfwer with fo much prudence and mildnefs, and give fuch apt advice, that many a time to confult with him, was to ask counfel at Abel, and fo to end the matter. He observed in almost all quarrels that happened, that there was a fault, on both fides; and that generally they were almost in the fault that were most forward and clamorous in their complaints. One making her moan to him of a bad hufband flie had, that in this, and 'tother inftance was unkind; and (Sir,) faith fhe, after a long complaint which he patiently heard, What would you have me to d . now? "Why truly (faith he) I would " have you go home and be a better wife to him, " and then you'll find that he will be a better hufband 🕊 to you."

Labouring to perfuade one to forgive an injury that had been done him; he urged this, Are you not a Chriftian? Chriftian ? and follow'd that argument fo clofe, that at laft he prevailed.

He was very industrious, and oft fuccessful, in perfuading people to recede from their right, for peace fake; and he would for that purpofe tell them Luther's flory of the two goats, that met upon a narrow bridge over a deep water; they could not go back, they durft not fight; after a fhort parley, one of them lay down, and let the other go over him, and no harm done. He would likewife relate fometimes a remarkable ftory, worthy to be here inferted, concerning a good friend of his, Mr T. Y. of Whitchurch, who in his youth was greatly wrong'd by an unjust uncle of his, being an orphan; his portion, which was 200% was put into the hands of that uncle; who, when he grew up, fhuffled with him, and would give him but 40% inftead of his 2001. and he had no way of recovering his right but by law; but before he would engage in that, he was willing to advise with his minister, who was the famous Dr Twifs of Newberry: the counfel he gave him (all things confidered) was for peace fake, and for the preventing of fin and fnares, and trouble, to take the 401. rather than contend ; and, Thomas, (faith the Doctor) if theu doft fo, affure thyfelf, that God will make it up to thee and thine, fome other way, and they that defraud thee will be the lofers by it at laft. He did fo, and it pleafed God fo to blefs that little which he began the world with, that when he died in a good old age, he left his fon posses'd of fome hundreds a year, and he that wrong'd him fell into decay.

Many very pious worthy families in the country faid of Mr Henry, that they had no friend like minded, who did naturally care for their flate, and fo affectionately fympathize with them, and in whom their hearts could fafely truft.

He was also very charitable to the poor, and was full of almsdeeds, which he did (as it is faid of Tabitha, Acts chapter ix. 36.) not which he faid he would do, or which he put others on to do, but which

which he did himfelf, difperfing abroad, and giving to the poor, feeking and rejoicing in opportunities of that kind: and whenever he gave an alms for the body, he ufually gave with it a fpiritual alms, fome good word of counfel, reproof, inflruction, or comfort, as there was occafion, and in accommodating these to the perfons he fpoke to, he had a great dexterity.

He was very forward to lend money freely, to any of his poor neighbours that had occafion, and would fometimes fay, that in many cafes there was more charity in lending than in giving, becaufe it obliged the borrower both to honefty and industry. When one of his neighbours, to whom he had lent three pound, fail'd, fo that he was never likely to fee a farthing of it, he writes thus upon it, "notwithstanding this, yet ftill I judge it my duty to lend," Luke xi. 35. Tho' what is lent in charity be not repaid, yet it is not loft. When those that had borrowed money of him paid him again, he ufually gave them back fome part, to encourage honefty. He judged the taking of moderate interest for money lawful, where the borrower was in a way of gaining by it : but he would advife his friends that had money, rather to difpose of it otherways, if they could.

It must not be forgotten, how punctual and exact he was in all his accounts with tenants, workmen, &c. being always careful to keep fuch things in black and white (as he us'd to fay) which is the fureft way to prevent mistakes, and a man's wronging either himself or his neighbour; fuch was his prudence, and fuch his patience and peaceableness, that of all the time he was at Broad-Oak, he never fued any, nor ever was fued, but was inftrumental to prevent many a vexatious lawfuit among his neighbours. He used to fay, There are four rules to be duly observed in going to law; (1.) We must not go to law for trifles, as he did who faid, he would rather fpend a hundred pound in law than lofe a pennyworth of his right, Matt. v. 39, 40, (2.) We must not be rash and hasty in it, but 41.

try all other means poffible to compofe differences, wherein he that yields moft, as Abraham did to Lot, is the better man, and there is nothing loft by it in the end, I Cor. vi. 1, 2. (3.) We must fee that it be without malice or defire of revenge. If the undoing of our brother, be the end of our going to law, as it is with many, 'tis certainly evil, and it fpeeds accordingly. (4.) It must be with a disposition to peace, whenever it may be had, and an ear open to all overtures of that kind. The two mottos proper for the great guns are applicable to this, Ratio ultima Regum and Sic quaerimus Pacem.

Four rules he fometimes gave to be observed in our converse with men :

Have communion with few, Be familiar with one; Deal juftly with all, Speak evil of none.

He was noted for an extraordinary neat hufband about his house and ground, which he would often fay, he could not endure to fee like the field of the flothful, and the vineyard of the man void of understanding. And it was strange, how easily one that had been bred up utterly a stranger to fuch things; yet when God fo ordered his lot, acquainted himfelf with, and accommodated himfelf to the affairs of the country, making it the diversion of his vacant hours, to over-fee his gardens and fields; when he better underftood that known epode of Horace, "Beatus ille " qui procul negotiis," than he did when in his youth he made an in enjous translation of it. His care of this kind was an act of charity to poor labourers whom he employed ; and it was a good example to his neighbours, as well as for the comfort of his family. His converfe likewife with thefe things was excellently improved, for fpiritual purpofes, by occasional meditations, hints of which there are often in his diary, as those that conversed with him had many in discourse: Infrances

Inftances of this were eafy, but endlefs to give. He ufed to fay, that therefore many of the fcripture parables and fimilitudes are taken from the common actions of this life, that when our hands are employed about them, our hearts may the more easily pass through them to divine and heavenly things. I have heard him often blame thofe, whofe irregular zeal in the profeffion of religion, makes them to neglect their worldly bufinefs, and let the houfe drop through; the affairs of which the good man will order with difcretion; and he would tell fometimes of a religious woman, whofe fault it was, how the was convinced of it, by means of an intelligent godly neighbour; who coming into the house, and finding the good woman, far in the day, in her clofet, and the house fadly neglected, children not tended, fervants not minded; "What, faith he, is there no fear of God in this houfe?" which much ftartled and affected the good woman, that over-heard He would often fay, " Every thing is beautiful him. in its feafon;" and that it is the wifdom of the prudent, fo to order the duties of their general callings as Chriftians, and those of their particular callings in the world, as that they may not clash or interfere: I have heard it observed from Eccl. vii. 16. That there may be over-doing in well-doing.

I cannot omit one little paffage in his diary, becaufe it may be inftructive: When he was once defired to be bound for one that had upon a particular occafion been bound for him, he writes, Solomon faith "He " that hateth furetifhip is fure; but he faith alfo, he " that hath friends must fhew himfelf friendly." But he always cautioned those that became fureties, not to be bound for any more than they knew themfelves able to pay, nor for more than they would be willing to pay, if the principal fail.

His houfe at Broad Oak was by the road fide, which, though it had its inconveniences, yet (he would fay) pleafed him well, becaufe it gave his friends an opportunity of calling on him the oftner, and gave him an opportunity opportunity of being kind to flrangers, and fuch as were any way diffreffed upon the road, to whom he was, upon all occafions, cheerfully ready; fully anfwering the apolile's character of a bishop, that he must be of good behaviour, decent, affable, and obliging and given to hofpitality, 14Tim. iii. 2.; like Abraham, fitting at his tent-door, in queft of opportunities to do good. If he met with any poor near his houfe, and gave them alms in money, yet he would bid them go to his door befides, for relief there. He was very tender and compafiionate towards poor strangers and travellers, though his charity and candor were often impofed upon by cheats and pretenders, whom he was not. apt to be fufpicious of; but would fay in the most favourable fense, Thou knowest not the heart of a ftranger. If any afked his charity, whole reprefentation of their cafe he did not like, or who he thought did amifs to take that courfe, he would first give them an alms, and then mildly reprove them; and labour to convince them that they were out of the way of duty, and that they could not expect that God fhould blefs them in it; and would not chide them, but reafon with them : And he would fay, if he fhould tell them of their faults, and not give them an alms, the reproof would look only like an excufe to deny his charity, and would be rejected accordingly.

In a word, his greatest care about the things of this world was, how to do good with what he had, and to devife liberal things; defiring to make no other acceffion to his eftate, but only that bleffing which attends beneficence. He did firmly believe (and it fhould feem few do) that what is given to the poor is lent to the Lord, who will pay it again in kind or kindnefs; and that religion and piety is furely the best friend to outward profperity, and he found it fo; for it pleafed God abundantly to blefs his habitation, and to make a hedge about him, and about all that he had round about : and tho' he did not delight himfelf in the abundance of wealth; yet, which is far better, he delight-Р ed ed himfelf in the abundance of peace, Pfal. xxxvii. 11. All that he had and did observably prospered; fo that the country oftentimes took notice of it, and called his family, a family which the Lord had bleffed. And his comforts of this kind were (as he used to pray they might be) oil to the wheels of his obedience, and in the use of these things he ferved the Lord his God with joyfulnels and gladnels of heart, yet still mindful of and grieved for the affliction of Joseph. He would fay fometimes, when he was in the midit of the comforts of this life, as that good man :---All this, and heaven too! furely then we ferve a good Master. Thus did the Lord blefs him, and make him a bleffing; and this abundant grace through the thankfgiving of many, redounded to the glory of God.

Having given this general account of his circumflances at Broad-Oak, we fhall now go on with his ftory, efpecially as to the exercise of his ministry there, and thereabouts; for that was the thing in which he was, and to which he chiefly gave himfelf. After this fettlenient at Brood-Oak, whenever there was preaching at Whitewell Chapel (as ufually there was two Lord's days in the month) he conflantly attended there with his family, was ufually with the first, and reverently joined in the public fervice; he diligently wrote the fermons ; always staid if the ordinance of baptism was administred, but not if there were a wedding, for he thought that a folemnity not proper for the Lord's day. He often din'd the minister that preach'd; after dinner he fung a pfalm, repeated the morning fermon, and pray'd; and then attended in like manner in the afternoon. In the evaning he preach'd to his own family; and perhaps two or three of his neighbours would drop in to him. On those Lord's days when there was no preaching at the Chapel, he fpent the whole day at home, and many an excellent fermon he preach'd, when there were prefent only four befides his own family (and perhaps not fo many) according to the limitation of the conventicle act. In thefe narrow row private circumftances he preached over the former part of the Affembly's Catechifm, from divers texts; he alfo preached over pfalm cxvi. befides many particular occafional fubjects.

What a grief of heart it was to him, to be thus put under a bufhel, and confin'd to fuch a narrow fphere of ulefuinefs, read in his own words, which I fhall tranfcribe out of an elegy he made (to give vent to his thoughts) upon the death of his worthy friend Mr Geo. Mainwaring, fometime minifter of Malpas, (who was filenced by the act of uniformity, and died Mar. 14. 1669-70.) wherein he thus bewails (feelingly encugh) the like reftraints and confinements of his friend:

> His later years be fadly fpent, Wrapt up in filence and restraint. A burthen fuch as none do know, But they that do it undergo, To have a fire shut up and pent Within the bowels, and no vent; To have gorg'd Breasts, and by a law, Those that fain would, sorbidden to draw. But his dumb Sabbaths here, did prove Loud crying Sabbaths in heav'n above. His tears, when he might fow no more, Wat'ring what he had fown before.

Soon after his fettlement at Broad Oak, he took a young fcholar into the houfe with him; partly to teach his fon, and partly to be a companion to himfelf to converte with him, and to receive help and inftruction from him; and for many years he was feldom without one or other fuch; who before their going to the Univerfity, or in the intervals of their attendance there, would be in his family, fitting under his thadow. One of the first he had with him, in the year 1668, (and after) was Mr William Turner, born in the neighbourhood; afterwards of Edmund Hall in Oxford, now vicar of Walberron in Suffex, to whom the world is be-P 2 holden holden for that elaborate hiftory of all religions which he published in the year 1695, and from whom is earneftly expected the performance of that noble and ufeful project for the record of providences. Betwixt Mr Henry and him there was a most entire and affectionate friendship; and notwithstanding that distance of place, and constant and endearing correspondence, kept up as long as Mr Henry liv'd.

It was observed that feveral young men who had fojourn'd with him, and were very hopeful and likely to be ferviceable to their generations, dy'd foon after their removal from him, (I could instance fix or feven,) as if God had fent them to him to be prepared for another world, before they were call'd for out of this; yet never any dy'd while they were with him.

He had fo great a kindnefs for the univerfity, and valu'd fo much the mighty advantages of improvement there, that he advis'd all his friends who defign'd their children for fcholars, to fend them thither, for many years after the change, though he always counted upon their conformity. But long experience altered his mind herein, and he chofe rather to keep his own fon at home with him, and to give him what help he could there, in his education, than venture him into the fnares and temptations of the univerfity.

It was also foon after this fettlement of his at Broad-Oak, that he contracted an intimate friendship with that learned, and pious, and judicious gentleman Mr Hunt of Boreatton, (the fon of colonel Hunt of Salop) and with his excellent lady Frances, daughter of the right honourable the lord Paget. The acquaintance then begun betwixt Mr Henry and that worthy family continued to his dying day, about thirty years. One Lord's day in a quarter he commonly spent with them, befides other interviews; and it was a constant rejoicing to him to fee religion and the power of godlines uppermost, in such a family as that, when not many mighty, not many noble are called; and the branches of it branches of righteousness, the planting of the Lord-

Divers of the honourable relations of that fa-Lord. mily contracted a very great respect for him, particu-larly the present lord Paget, his Majesty's Ambaffador at the Ottoman court, and Sir Henry Ashurst, whom we shall have occasion afterwards to make mention of.

In the time of trouble and diffres, by the conventicle act, in 1670, he kept private and ftirr'd little abroad, as loth to offend those that were in power, and judging it prudence to gather in his fails, when the ftorm was violent: He then observ'd, as that which he was troubled at; " That there was a great deal of " precious time loft among profeffors, when they came " together, in difcourfing of their adventures to meet, " and their escapes, which he feared tended more to " fet up felf, than to give glory to God." Alfo in telling how they got together, and fuch a one preached, but little enquiring what fpiritual benefit and advantage was reaped by it; and that we are apt to make the circumstances of our religious fervices, more the matter of our discourse, than the substance of them.

We fhall clofe this chapter with two remarks out of his diary, in the year 1671, which will fhew what manner of fpirit he was of, and what were his fentiments of things at that time. One is this, " All ac-" knowledge that there is at this day a number of fo-" ber, peaceable men, both ministers and others, a-" mong diffenters, but who either faith or doth any " thing to oblige them ? who defireth or endeavour-" eth to open the door to let in fuch? nay, do they " not rather provoke them to run into the fame ex-" travagancies with others by making no difference, " but laying load on them as if they were as bad as the worff." 'Tis true, that about this time the lord " keeper Bridgman and bifhop Wilkins, and the lord Chief Justice Hale, were making fome overtures towards an accommodation with them; but it is as true, that those overtures did but the more exasperated their adverfaries, (who were ready to account fuch moderate men the worst enemies the church of England had,) and the event was, greater acts of feverity. Another is this, "IF all that hath been faid and

Another is this, " If all that hath been faid and " written to prove that prelacy is antichriftian, and " that it is unlawful to join in the common-prayer, " had been effectually to perfwade bifhops to ftudy " and do the duty of church-rulers, in preaching and " feeding the flock, according to the word, and to " perfwade people to be ferious inward, and fpiritual " the in ufe of forms, it had been better with the " church of God in England, than it now is." Confonant to the fpirit of this remark, was that which he took all occafions to mention as his fettled principle : " In those things wherein all the people of God are " agreed, I will fpend my zeal; and wherein they " differ I will endeavour to walk according to the " light that God hath given me, and charitably be-" lieve that others do fo too."

CHAP. VI.

His liberty by the indulgence in the year 1672, and thenceforwards to the year 1681.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fevere act againft conifts in London ventur'd to fet up meetings in 1671, and were conniv'd at; but in the country there was little liberty taken till the King's declaration of March 15, 1671-2, gave countenance and encouragement to it. What were the fecret fprings which produced that declaration time difcovered; however, it was to the poor differents as life from the dead, and gave them fome reviving in their bondage; God gracioufly ordering it fo, that the fpirit he had made might not fail before him. But fo precarious a liberty was it, that it fhould never be faid, those people were hard to be pleafed, who were fo well pleafed with that, and thanked ed God, who put fuch a thing into the King's heart. The tenor of that declaration was this : "In confideration of the inefficacy of rigor, tried for divers years, and to invite ftrangers into the kingdom, ratifying the effablifhment in the church of England, it fufpends penal laws againft all non-conformitts and recufants, promifeth to licenfe feparate places for meetings, limiting papifts only to private houfes."

On this Mr Henry writes, "It is a thing diverfly " referred, as mens interefts lead them; the conform-" ifts difpleafed, the prefbyterians glad, the indepen-66 dents very glad, the papifts triumph. The danger " is (faith he) left the allowing of feparate places help 65 to overthrow our parifh-order, which God hath " own'd, and to beget divisions and animolities among " us, which no honeft heart but would rather fhould " be healed. We are put hereby (faith he) into a 66 trilemma, either to turn independents in practice, 66 or to ftrike in with the conformifts, or to fit down " in former filence and fufferings (and filence he accounted one of the greatest fufferings) till the Lord 66 " fhall open a more effectual door." That which (he faith) he then heartily wifhed for, was, " That those who " were in place, would admit the fober non-conform-" ifts to preach fometimes occafionally in their pul-" pits; by which means he thought prejudices would " in time wear off on both fides, and they might mu-66 tually ftrengthen each other's hands against the 66 common enemy the papifts, who he forefaw would " fifh beft in troubled waters." This he would chufe much rather than to keep a feparate meeting : but it could not be had; no, not fo much as leave to preach in Whitewell-chapel when it was vacant, as it often was, though 'twere three long miles from the parifhchurch. He found that fome people, the more they are courted, the more coy they are; however, the overtures he made to this purpole, and the flow fteps he took towards the fetting up of a diffinct congregation, vielded him fatisfaction afterwards in the reflection.

tion, when he could fay, we would have been united, and they would not.

'Twas feveral weeks after the declaration came out, that he received a licenfe to preach, as Paul did, in his own houfe, and elfewhere, no man forbidding him. This was procur'd for him by fome of his friends in London, without his privity, and came to him altogether unexpected. The use he made of it was, that at his own houfe, what he did before to his own family, and in private, the doors being fhut for fear, he now did more publicly; threw his doors open, and welcomed his neighbours to him, to partake of his fpiritual things. Only one fermon in the evening of the Lord's day, when there was preaching at Whitewellchapel, where he ftill continued his attendance with his family and friends as ufual; but when there was not, he fpent the whole day, at public time, in the fervices of the day, exposition of the fcriptures read, and preaching, with prayer and praife. This he did gratis, receiving nothing for his labours, either at home or abroad, but the fatisfaction of doing good to fouls (which was his meat and drink) with the trouble and charge of giving entertainment to many of his friends, which he did with much chearfulnefs; and he would fay, he fometimes thought that the bread did even multiply in the breaking; and he found that God did abundantly blefs his provision, with that bleffing, which, as he used to fay, will make a little to go a great way. He was wont to obferve, for the encouragement of fuch as had meetings in their houfes, (which fometimes drew upon them inconveniences) that the ark is a guest that always pays well for its entertainment. And he noted, that when Chrift had borrowed Peter's boat to preach a fermon out of it, he prefently repaid him for the loan, with a great draught of filhes, Luke v. 3, 4.

Many thoughts of heart he had concerning this ufe he made of the liberty, not knowing what would be in the end hereof; but after ferious confideration, and many prayers, he faw his way very plain before him, and and addreffed himfelf with all diligence, to the improvement of this gale of opportunity. Some had difmal apprehenfions of the iffue of it; and that there would be an after-reckoning: but (faith he) let us mind our duty, and let God alone to order events, which are his work, not ours.

It was a word upon the wheels, which he preached at that time for his own encouragement, and the encouragement of his friends, from that fcripture, Eccl. xi. 4. " He that obferves the wind fhall not fow, and " he that regardeth the clouds fhall not reap." Thofe that are minded either to do good, or get good, muft not be frighted with feeming difficulties and difcouragements. Our work is to fow and reap, to do good and get good; and let us mind that, and let who will mind the winds and clouds. " A lion in the way, a lion in " the ftreets ;" a very unlikely place (he would fay) for lions to be in; and yet that ferves the fluggard for an excufe.

While this liberty lasted, he was in labours more abundant; many lectures he preached abroad in Shropfhire, Chefhire, and Denbighfhire, laying out himfelf exceedingly for the good of fouls, fpending and being fpent in the work of the Lord. And of that neighbourhood and of that time it was faid, that "this and " that man was born again, then and there;" and many there were who afked the way to Zion with their faces thitherwards, and were (not profelyted to a party, but) favingly brought home to Jefus Chrift. I mean this; fuch as had been vain and worldly, and carelefs, and mindless of God and another world, became sober and ferious, and concern'd about their fouls, and a future state. This was the conversion of fouls, aimed at, and laboured after, and through grace not altogether in vain. Whatever lectures were fet up in the country round, 'twas still defired that Mr Henry would begin them (which was thought no fmall encouragement to those who were to carry them on) and very happy he was, both in the choice and management of his fubjects at fuch opportunities, feeking to find out acceptable words. Take one specimen of his address, when he began a lecture with a fermon on Heb. xii. 15. "I af-" fure you (faith he) and God is my witnefs, I am " not come to preach, either fedition against the peace " of the flate, or fchifm against the peace of the church, " by perfuading you to this or that opinion or party; " but as a minister of Christ, that hath received mer-" cv from the Lord, to defire to be faithful, my er-" rand is to exhort you to all poffible ferioufnefs, in " the great business of your eternal falvation, accord-" ing to my text. which, if the Lord will make as pro-" fitable to you, as it is material and of weight in it-" felf, neither you nor 1 shall have caufe to repent our " coming hither, and our being here to-day; looking " diligently, left any of you fail of the grace of God. " It it were the lait fermion I were to preach, I did not " know how to take my ann better to do you good."

In doing of this work, he often faid, that he looked upon himself but as an affistant to the parish ministers, in promoting the common interests of Christ's kingdom, and the common falvation of precious fouls, by the explication and application of those great truths wherein we are all agreed. And he would compare the cafe to that in Hezekiah's time, when the Levites helped the Priefts to kill the facrifice, which was fomething of an irregularity; but the exigence of affairs called for it, the priefts being too few, and fome of them not fo careful as they should have been, to fanctify themfelves, 2 Chr. xxix. 34.; and wherever he preached, he usually pray'd for the parish minister, and for a bleffing upon his ministry. He hath often faid how well pleas'd he was, when, after he had preached a lecture at Ofwestry, he went to visit the minister of the p ace, Mr Edwards, a worthy good man, and told him, he had been fowing a handful of feed among his people, and had this anfwer, " That's well, the Lord prof-" per your feed and mine too, there's need enough of " us both." And another worthy conformilt that came came privately to hear him, but was reprimanded for it by his fuperiors, told him afterwards with tears, that his heart was with him.

His heart was wonderfully enlarged in his work at this time, the fields were white unto the harvest; and he was bufy, and God did remarkably own him, fetting many feals to his ministry, which much confirmed him in what he did. He hath this obfervable paffage in his diary, about this time, which he recorded for his after benefit (and the example of it may be instructive) "Remember, that if trouble fhould come hereafter, for what we do now in the use of present liberty, " I neither fhrink from it, nor fink under it; for I do therein approve myfelf to God, and to my own con-€6 " fcience, in truth and uprightnefs; and the Lord " whom I ferve, can, and will certainly both bear me " out, and bring me off with comfort in the end. " fay, Remember, and forget it not, this 24th day of " March, 1672-3."

'Twas at the beginning of this liberty that the Society at Broad Oak did commence; made up (befides their neighbourhood) of fome out of Whitchurch, and Whitchurch parish, that had been Mr Porter's people, fome out of Hanmer parish, that had been Mr Steel's, and fome out of the parifhes of Wem, Prees, and Ellifmere; perfons generally of very moderate and fober principles, quiet and peaceable lives, and hearty wellwifhers to the King and Government; and not rigid or schifmatical in their separation, but willing to attend (though fometimes with difficulty and hazard) upon those administrations which they found most lively and edifying, and most helpful to them, in the great bufinefs of working out their falvation. To this Society he would never call himfelf a paftor, nor was he willing that they fhould call him fo; but a helper, and a minister of Christ for their good. He would fay, " That " he look'd upon his family only as his charge, and " his preaching to others was but accidental, whom if " they came, he could no more turn away than he " could Q 2

" could a poor hungry man, that fhould come to his " door for an alms. And being a minifter of Jefus " Chrift, he thought him/elf bound to preach the gof-" pel as he had opportunity."

Ufually once a month he administred the ordinance of the Lord's fupper. Some of his opportunities of that kind he fets a particular remark upon, as fweet fealing days, on which he found it good to draw near to God.

When about the year's end there was a general expectation of the cancelling of the indulgence, he hath this note upon a precious fabbath and facrament day, as he calls it, "Perhaps this may be the laft; Father, thy " will be dene: it is good for us to be at fuch uncer-" tainties; for now we receive our liberty from our " Father fresh every day, which is best and fweetest of all."

On the 3d of March, 1676-7, being Saturday night. the Town of Wem in Shropshire (about fix miles from him) was burnt down; the church, market-houfe, and about one hundred and twenty-fix dwelling houfes, and one man, in little more than an hour's time, the wind being exceeding violent; at which time Mr Henry was very helpful to his friends there, both for their fupport under, and their improvement of this fad providence. It was but about half a year before, that a threatning fire had broke out in that town, but did little hurt; fome ferious people there, prefently after, celebrated a thankfgiving for their deliverance, in which Mr Henry imparted to them a fpiritual gift (Oct. 3. 1676.) from Zech. iii. 2. " Is not this a brand plucked out of the " fire ?" in the clofe of that fermon, prefling them from the confideration of that remarkable deliverance, to perfonal reformation and amendment of life : that those who had been proud, covetous, paffionate, liars, fwearers, drunkards, fabbath breakers, would be fo no more; and urging Ezra. ix. 13, 14. he added, " If this provi-" dence have not this effect upon you, you may in " reafon expect another fire : for when God judgeth, ic he

" he will overcome;" and minded them of Lev. xxvi. where 'tis fo often threatned against those who walk contrary to God, that he would punifh them yet feven -times more. The remembrance of this could not but be affecting, when, in fo fhort a time after, the whole town was laid in ruins. The first time he went thither after that calamity, a neighbouring justice having notice of it, fent to forbid him to preach, to his own grief as well as to the grief of many others, who came expecting. But (faith he in his diary) there was a vifible fermon before us, the ruins preaching that fin is an evil thing, and God a terrible God. However, a few days after, he got an opportunity of preaching to them a word in feafon, which fome will not forget, from Hof. vi. 1. " Come, and let us return unto the Lord, " for he hath torn --- And at the return of the year, when the town was in the rebuilding, he gave them another very fuitable fermon, from Prov. iii. 33. "The " curfe of the Lord is in the houfe of the wicked, but " he bleffeth the habitation of the juft." "Though it " be rifing again (faith he in his diary) out of its afhes, " yet the burning of it should not be forgotten, especi-" ally not the fin that kindled it." He oft prayed for them, that the fire might be a refining fire.

In the years 1677, 1678, and 1679, in the courfe of his ministry at Broad Oak he preached over the Ten Commandments, and largely opened from other texts of fcripture the duties required, and fins forbidden, in each commandment. For tho' none delighted more than he in preaching Chrift and gofpel grace; yet he knew that Chrift came not to deftroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfil; and that, though through grace we are not under the law, as a covenant; yet we are under it as a rule, under the law to Chrift. He was very large and particular in preffing fecond table duties, as effential to Christianity. "We have known " those (faith he) that have called preaching on such " fubjects good moral preaching; but let them call it " as they will, I am fure it is necessary and as much ≤ € now

" now as ever." How earneftly would he prefs upon the people the necessity of righteousness and honefty, in their whole converfations. " A good Chriftian (he " ufed to fay) will be a good hufband, and a good fa-" ther, and a good mafter, and a good fubject, and a " good neighbour, and fo in other relations." How often would he urge to this purpose, that it is the will and command of the great God, the character of all the citizens of Zion, the beauty and ornament of our Chriftian profession; and the furest way to thrive and profper in the world. "Honefty is the beft policy." He would fay, that these are things in which the children of this world are competent judges. They that know not what belongs to faith, and repentance, and prayer, yet know what belougs to the making of an honeft bargain: they are also parties concerned, and oftentimes are themfelves careful in these things; and therefore those who profess religion should walk very circumfpectly, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blafphemed, nor religion wounded through their fides. Thus he preached, and his constant practice was a comment upon it. One thing I remember he was more than ordinarily enlarged in the preffing of, which was upon the ninth commandment, to fpeak evil of no man, from Tit. iii. 2. If we can fay no good of perfons, we must fay nothing of them. He gave it as a rule, " Never to fpeak of any ones faults to others, till we " have first spoken of them to the offender himself." He was himfelf an eminent example of this rule. Some that have converfed much with him, have faid, that they never heard him speak evil of any body; nor could he bear to hear any fpoken evil of, but often drove away a backbiting tongue with an angry countenance. He was known to be as faithful a patron of offenders before others, as he was a faithful reprover of them to themfelves.

Whenever he preached of moral duties, he would always have fomething of Chrift in his fermon; either his life, as the great pattern of the duty, or his love, as the great motive to it; or his merit, as making atonement for the neglect of it.

In the year 1685 he preached over the doctrines of faith and repentance, from feveral texts of fcripture. He ufed to fay, that he had been told concerning the famous Mr Dod, that fome called him in fcorn, Faith and Repentance; becaufe he infifted fo much upon thofe two, in all his preaching. But (faith he) " if this be " to be vile, I will be yet more vile ;" for faith and repentance are all in all in chriftianity.

Concerning repentance he hath fometimes faid, "If "I were to die in the pulpit, I would defire to die "preaching repentance; as if I die out of the pulpit, "I would defire to die practifing repentance." And he had often this faying concerning repentance; "He "that repents every day, for the fins of every day, "when he comes to die, will have the fins but of one "day to repent of. Even reckonings make long "friends."

That year, and 1681, he preached over the duties of hearing the word and prayer; of the former, from the parable of the four forts of ground; of the latter, from Luke xi. 1. &c. when he preached over the Lord's prayer, in above thirty excellent and elaborate difcourfes. He looked upon the Lord's prayer, to be not only a directory or pattern for prayer, but (according to the advice of the affembly of divines) proper to be used as a form; and accordingly he often used it both in public and in his family. And as he thought 'twas an error on the one hand, to lay fo much ftrefs upon it as fome do, who think no folemn prayer accepted, nor any folemn ordinance or administration of worship compleat without it, and fo repeat it five or fix times, and perhaps oftener, at one meeting; fo he thought it an error on the other hand not to use it at all; fince it is a prayer, a compendious comprehensive prayer, and may be of use to us, at least as other fcripture prayers; but he thought it a much greater error to be angry at those that do use it, to judge and censure them, and for no other reason to conveive prejudices against them and their ministry. "A great strait (faith he) poor mini-"fiters are in, when some will not hear them, if they "do not use the Lord's prayer, and others will not "hear them if they do: what is to be done in this case? "we must walk according to the light we have, and "approve ourselves to God, either in using or not us-"ing it, and wait for the day when God will mend "the matter, which I hope he will do in his own due "time."

He was in the clofe of his exposition of the Lord's prayer, when a dark cloud was brought upon his affemblies, and he was necessitated to contract his fails.

CHAP. VII.

The Rebukes he lay under at Broad Oak, betwixt the years 1680, and 1687.

TN the beginning of the year 1681 in April and May, L the country was greatly afflicted and threatned by an extreme drought; there was no rain for feveral weeks, the grafs failed ; corn that was fown languished, and much that was intended to be fown, could not; the like had not been known for many years: 'twas generally apprehended that a dearth would enfue, efpecially in that country, which is for the most part dry. And now it was time to feek the Lord, and (according to his own appointment,) to " afk of him rain in " the feafon thereof :" feveral ferious thinking people being together at the funeral of that worthy minifter of Jefus Chrift, Mr Malden; it was there faid, how requifite it was that there should be fome time fet apart on purpose for fasting and prayer, in a folemn affembly upon this occafion. Thomas Millington of Wefton in Hodnet parish in Shropshire, defired it might be at his house; and Tuesday June 14. was the day pitched upon. The connivance of authority was prefumed upon, upon, becaufe no diffurbance of meetings was heard of at London, or any where elfe. Mr Henry was defired to come and give his affiftance at that day's work. He asked upon what terms they flood with their neighbouring juffices, and it was anfwered, Well enough. The drought continuing in extremity, fome that had not used to come to fuch meetings, yet came thither upon the apprehension they had of the threatning judgment which the country was under. Mr Edward Bury of Bolas (well known by feveral ufeful books he hath published) prayed, Mr Henry prayed and preached on Pfal. lxvi. 18. " If I regard iniquity in my heart, " the Lord will not hear me;" whence his doctrine was, That iniquity regarded in the heart will certainly fpoil the fuccefs of prayer. When he was in the midft of his fermon clofely applying this truth Sir T. V. of Hodnet, and Mr M. of Ightfield, two juffices of the peace for Shropshire, with feveral others of their retinue, came fuddenly upon them, difturbed them, fet guards upon the houfe-door, and came in themfelves, feverely rally'd all they knew reflected upon the late Honourable Houfe of Commons, and the vote they paffed concerning the prefent unreafonablenefs of putting the laws in execution against Protestant diffenters, as if in fo voting they had acted beyond their fphere, as they who did who took away the life of King Charles I. They diverted themfelves with very abufive and unbecoming talk; fwearing, and curfing, and reviling bitterly. Being told the occafion of the meeting was to feek to turn away the anger of God from us in the prefent drought: 'twas anfwered, " Such meetings as thefe were the caufe of God's anger."----While they were thus entertaining themfelves, their clerks took the names of those that were prefent, in all, about one hundred and fifty, and fo difinified them for the prefent. Mr Henry hath noted, in the account he kept of this event, that the Justices came to this good work from the ale-houfe upon Prees-Heath, about two miles off; to which, and the bowling-green R adjoining, adjoining, they, with other justices, gentlemen, and clergymen, of the neighbourhood, had, long before, obliged themfelves to come every Tuefday, during the fummer time, under the penalty of twelve pence a time if they were abfent; and there to fpend the day in drinking and bowling; which is thought to be as direct a violation of the law of the land, viz. the statute of 33 Henry VIII. cap. 9. for debarring unlawful games, which was never yet repealed, as the meeting was of the statute of 22d Car. II. and as much more to the diffionour of God, and the fcandal of the Chriftian profession; as curfing, and fwearing, and drunkennefs, is worfe than praying and finging pfalms, and hearing the word of God It is supposed that the Juffices knew of the meeting before, and might have prevented it by the least intimation; but they were willing to take the opportunity of making fort to themfelves, and trouble to their neighbours. After the feat done, they returned back to the alehoufe, and made themfelves and their companions merry with calling over the names they had taken, making their reflections as they faw caufe; and recounting the particulars of the exploit. There was one of the company, whofe wife happened to be prefent at the meeting, and her name taken among the reft; with which upbraiding him, he anfwered, that fhe had been better employed than he was, and if Mr Henry might be admitted to preach in a church, he would go a great many miles to hear him. For which words he was forthwith expelled their company, and never more to fhew his face again at that bowling-green; to which he replied, If they had fo ordered long ago, it had been a great deal the better for him and his family. Two days after, they met again at Hodnet, where, upon the oath of two witneffes, who, as was fuppoled, were fent on purpose to inform, they figned and fealed two records of conviction. By one record they convicted the mafter of the house, and fined him L.20, and L.5 more as conftable of the town that year, and with him all all the perfons prefent whole names they had taken, and fined them five shillings a piece, and iffued out warrants accordingly. By another record they conviced the two minifters, Mr Bury and Mr Henry .----The act makes it only punishable to preach or teach in any fuch conventicle; and yet they fined Mr Bury L.20, though he only prayed, and did not fpeak one word in the way either of preaching or teaching, not fo much as " let us pray ;" however, they faid, praying was teaching, and right or wrong he must be fined; though his great piety, peaceablenefs, and ufefulnefs, befides his deep poverty, one would think might have pleaded for him, against fo palpable a piece of injustice. They took L.7 off from him, and laid it upon others, as they faw caufe; and for the remaining L. 13, he being utterly unable to pay it, they took from him, by diffrefs, the bed which he lay upon, with blanket and rug; alfo another feather-bed, nineteen pair of fheets, most of them new; of which he could not prevail to have fo much as one pair returned for him to lye in; alfo books to the value of L. 5, befides brafs and pewter. And though he was at this time perfectly innocent of that heinous crime of preaching and teaching, with which he was charged, (for fo the record runs again and again, concerning Mr Henry and Mr Bury, Quod ad tune & ibidem precaverunt, prædicaverunt & docuerunt.) Yet he had no way to right himfelf, but by appealing to the Justices themfelves in Quarter Seffions, who would be fure to affirm their own decree, (as the Juffices in Montgomeryshire had done not long before, in a like cafe,) especially when it was to recover to themfelves treble cofts. So the good man fat down with his lofs, and " took joyfully the fpoiling of his goods; knowing in himfelf, that he had in heaven a better, and a more enduring fubftance."

But Mr Henry being the greateft criminal, and having done the most mischief, must needs be animadverted upon accordingly, and therefore he was fined L.40, the the pretence of which was this :----In the year 1679. Oct. 15, Mr Kynaston of Oatly, a Justice of Peace in Shropshire, meeting him and fome others coming, as he fuppofed, from a conventicle, he was pleas'd to record their conviction, upon the notorious evidence and circumstance of the fact. The record was filed at Salop the next feffions after; but no notice was ever fent of it, either to Mr Henry or the Justices of Flintfhire; nor any profecution upon it, against any of the parties charged, (the reafon of which, Mr Henry, in a narrative he wrote of this affair, supposeth to be not only the then favourable posture of public affairs towards diffenters, but alfo the particular prudence and lenity of Mr Kynaston,) fo that having never smarted for this, he could not be supposed to be deterred from the like offence; nor if he were wronged in that first conviction, had he ever any opportunity of making his appeal. However, the Juffices being refolved he fhould have fummum jus, thought that first record fufficient to give denomination to a fecond offence, and fo he came to be fined double. This conviction (according to the direction of the act.) they certified to the next adjoining Juffices of Flintshire, who had all along carried themfelves with great temper and moderation towards Mr Henry, and had never given him any diffurbance; though if they had been fo minded, they had not wanted opportunities; but they were now neceffitated to execute the fentences of the Shropshire Justices.----'Twas much preffed upon him to pay the fine, which might prevent his own lofs, and the Justices' trouble. But he was not willing to do it; partly, becaufe he would give no encouragement to fuch profecutions, nor voluntarily reward the informers for that which he thought they fhould rather be punifhed for; and partly becaufe he thought himfelf wronged in the doubling of the fine. Whereupon his goods were distrained upon, and carried away; in the doing of which many paffages occurred which might be worth the noting, but that the repetition of them would perhaps haps grate and give offence to fome. Let it therefore fuffice (waving the circumstances) to remember only that their warrant not giving them authority to break open doors, nor their watchfulnefs getting them an opportunity to enter the houfe, they carried away about thirty-three cart load of goods without doors, corn cut upon the ground, hay, coals, &c. This made a great noife in the country, and raifed the indignation of many against the decrees which prefcribed this grievoufnefs; while Mr Henry bore it with his ufual evenness and ferenity of mind, not at all moved or difturbed by it. He did not boaft of his fufferings, or make any great matter of them; but would often fay, " Alas! this is nothing to what others fuffer, nor " to what we ourfelves may fuffer before we die."---And yet he rejoiced and bleffed God that it was not for debt, or for evil-doing, that his goods were carried away. " And (faith he) while it is for well-doing that " we fuffer, they cannot harm us." Thus he writes in his diary upon it, " How oft have we faid that chan-" ges are at the door ; but bleffed be God there is no " fting in this." He frequently expressed the assurance he had, that whatever damage he fustained, God is able to make it up again. And (as he used to fay,) " Though we may be lofers for Chrift, yet we shall not " be lofers by him in the end." He had often faid, " That his preaching was likely to do the most good, " when it was fealed to by fuffering; and if this be the " time, (faith he) welcome the will of God; even this " alfo fhall turn to the furtherance of the gofpel of " Chrift :" Bene agere & male pati vere Christianum est.

Soon after this was the affizes for Flintshire held at Mold, where Sir George Jeffries, afterwards Lord Chancellor, then Chief Justice of Chefter, fat Judge. He did not, in private conversation, feem to applaud what was done in this matter, fo as was expected; whether out of a private pique against fome that were active in it, or for what other reason, is not known; but but it was faid, he pleafantly afked fome of the gentlemen, By what new law they preffed carts, as they paffed upon their occasions along the road, to carry away goods diffrained for a conventicle? It was alfo faid, that he fpoke with fome refpect of Mr Henry; faying, he knew him and his character well, and that he was a great friend of his mother's, Mrs Jeffries of Acton near Wrexham, (a very pious, good woman,) and that fometimes, at his mother's request, Mr Henry had examined him in his learning, when he was a fchool-boy, and had commended his proficiency. And it was much wondered at by many, that, of all the times Sir George Jeffries went to that circuit, (though 'tis well enough known what was his temper, and what the temper of that time,) yet he never fought any occafion against Mr Henry, nor took the occasions that were offered, nor countenanced any trouble intended him, though he was the only non-conformift in Flintfhire. One paffage, I remember, not improper to be mentioned ;----there had been an agreement among fome ministers, (I think it began in the west of England, where Mr Allen was) to fpend fome time, either in fecret or in their families, or both, between fix and eight o'clock every Monday morning, in prayer, for the church of God, and for the land and nation, more fully and particularly than at other times, and to make that their special errand at the throne of grace; and to engage as many of their praying friends as they could, to the observance of it. This had been communicated to Mr Henry by fome of his friends at London, and he punctually observed it in his own practice, I believe, for many years. He alfo mentioned it to fome of his acquaintance, who did in like manner observe it. It happened that one in Denbighfhire, to whom he had communicated it, was fo well pleafed with it, that he wrote a letter of it to a friend of his at a diftance; which letter happened into hands that perverted it, and made information upon it, against the writer and receiver of the letter, who were bound bound over to the affizes, and great fufpicions Sir Geo. Jeffries had, that it was a branch of the Prefbyterian plot, and rallied the parties accufed feverely. It appeared, either by the letter, or by the confeffion of the parties, that they received the project from Mr Henry, which (it was greatly feared) would bring him into trouble; but Sir George, to the admiration of many, let it fall, and never enquired further into it. It feems there are fome men, whofe ways fo pleafe the Lord, that he makes even their enemies to be at peace with them; and there is nothing loft by trufting in God.

Mr Henry, at the next affizes after he was diffrained upon, was prefented by one of the high conftables, 1. For keeping a conventicle at his houfe; and, 2. For faying, That the law for suppressing conventicles ought not to be obeyed, and that there was never a tittle of the word of God in it. As to this latter prefentment, 'twas altogether falfe. He had, indeed, in difcourfe with the high conftable, when he infifted fo much upon the law, which required him to be fo rigorous in the profecution, objected, That all human laws were not to be obeyed, merely becaufe they were laws. But as to any fuch reflections upon the law he fuffered by, he was far from it, and had prudence enough to keep filence at that time; for it was an evil time when fo many were made offenders for a word. But these prefentments met with fo little countenance from Judge Jeffries, that Mr Henry only entered his appearance in the Prothonotary's office, and they were no more heard of; wherein he acknowledged the hand of God, who turneth the hearts of the children of men as the rivulets of-water.

As to what was taken from him by the diffrefs, they who took it made what markets they pleafed of it, paid those they employed, and what the remainder was is not known for certainty; but it was faid, that the following fummer, about L 27 was paid to Sir T.V. of which, (and the rest that was levied in other places, which which amounted to a confiderable fum,) it was credibly reported, (and I have not heard it contradicted,) that neither the king nor the poor had their fhare, (which by the act is to be two-thirds) nor the informers all theirs either; but people faid, the Gentlemen had occafion for it all. But as they that had it were never the richer for it, fo he that loft it would often fay, that he found that God did fo abundantly blefs the remainder to him, that he was never the poorer; which he would mention for the encouragement of his friends, not to baulk duty (as he ufed to express it) for fear of fuffering.

In the fame year, 1681, happened a public difcourfe at Ofwestry, betwixt the then bishop of St Afaph, (Dr William Lloyd, now bishop of Coventry and Litchfield) and fome non-conformist ministers, of which Mr Henry was one.

The ftory, in fhort, is as followeth :--- That learned bishop, at his first coming to the diocefe of St Afaph, in his zeal for the eftablished church, fet himfelf with vigour to reduce diffenters to it; and that he mig<sup>1</sup>, t do it with the cords of a man, he refolved, before he took any other methods, to reafon the matter with them, and to endeavour their conviction by difcourfe, in which he had a very great facility, both by his learning and temper. If there were any that declined difcourfing with him, he improved that against them very much; urging, (as he wrote afterwards to Mr Henry,) " That no man can pretend confcience " for not coming when he is required, to give an ac-" count of his religion to them that have authority " to demand it, by the laws under which he lives, and " to hear from their mouths what can be faid for the " established religion. These are things from which " conficience is fo far from exempting, that the great " rule of confcience requires it, as an indifpenfible " duty; that we fhould always be ready to give " an account of the hope that is in us; and that we " fhould hear them that are in Mofes' chair, &c. and " there-

" as men governed, not by confcience, but obftinacy." He publickly difcourfed with the Quakers at Lanvillin in Montgomeryfhire; their champion was Dr Lloyd a phyfician : one of the most confiderable nonconformist ministers in his diocese was Mr James Owen of Ofweftry, then very young, but well known fince by his learned book, which he calls, A Plea for Scripture Ordination; proving ordination by prefbyters, without diocefan bishops, to be valid, published in the year 1694.) a point of controverfy which he was then obliged in his own defence to fearch into. Several difcourfes the bifhop had with him in private; at laft his lordship was pleafed to appoint him, to give him the meeting in the town-hall of Ofweltry, on Tuefday, Sept. 27, 1681, there to give account by what right he exercifed the ministry, not having epilcopal ordination. He directed him alfo to procure what other ministers he could to affist him, for he would be glad to hear what any of them had to fay for themfelves. The notice was very fhort, not above four or five days: fome whofe affiftance was defired, apprehended it might do more hurt than good, and might be prejudicial to their own liberty, and therefore declin'd it. It was not agreeable to Mr Henry's mild and modeft temper, to appear in fuch circumftances; but he was loath to defert his friend Mr Owen, and fo with much importunity he was prevailed with to come to Ofweltry, at the time appointed ; and there came no other but he and Mr Jonathan Roberts of Denbighshire, in the diocefe of Bangor, a plain man, of great integrity, and a very good fcholar. The bifnop came according to appointment, and brought with him for his affiftant the famous Mr Henry Dodwell: Mr Henry, who was utterly a ftranger to the bishop, preffed hard to have had the discourse in private, before a felect number, but it would not be granted. He alfo defired his lordfhip that it might not be expected from him, being of another diocele, to concern himself in the discourse, but only as a hearer : " Nay, Mr Henry, (faid the bifhop) it is not the concern of my diocese alone, but it is the common cause of religion, and therefore I expect you fhould intereft yourfelf in it more than as a hearer." His lordship was pleafed to promife, that nothing that fhould be faid by way of argument fhould be any way turned to the prejudice of the difputants, nor advantage taken of it to give them trouble. There were prefent divers of the clergy and gentry of the country, with the magiftrates of the town and a great number of people, which, if it could have been avoided, was not easy to Mr Henry, who never loved any thing that made a noife; herein like his Master, who did not strive nor cry. The difcourfe began about two o'clock in the afternoon, and continued till between feven and eight at night : much was faid pro and con, touching the identity of bishops and prefbyters, the bishoping and unbishoping of Timothy and Titus, the validity of prefbyterian ordination, &c. 'Twas managed with a great deal of liberty, and not under the ftrict laws of difputation, which made it hard to give any tolerable account of the particulars of it. The arguments on both fides, may better be fetched from the books written on the fubject, than from fuch a difcourfe. The bishop managed his part of the conference with a great deal of gravity, calmnefs, and evennefs of fpirit, and therein gave an excellent pattern to all that are in fuch stations. Mr Henry's remark upon this bufinefs in his diary is this, "That whereas many reports went abroad far and near concerning it, every one paffing their judgment upon the refult of it as they ftood affected; for my own part (faith he) upon reflection, I find I have great reafon to be afhamed of my manifold infirmities and imperfections; and yet do blefs God, that feeing I could manage it no better, to do the truth more fervice, there was not more faid and done to its differvice; to God be glory." But there were others, who faid that Mr Henry was an inftrument inftrument of glorifying God, and ferving the church in that affair, almost as much as in any thing that ever he did, except the preaching of the gofpel. And fome who were adverfaries to the caufe he pleaded, though they were not convinced by his arguments, yet by his great mecknefs and humility, and that truly Chriftian fpirit, which appeared fo evidently in the whole management, were brought to have a better opinion of him, and the way in which he walked.

The conference broke off a little abruptly; the bifhop and Mr Henry being fomewhat clofe at an argument, in the recapitulation of what had been difcourfed of; Mr Jonathan Roberts whilpered to Mr Henry, "Pray let my lord have the last word;" which a juffice of peace upon the bench over-hearing; prefently replied, " You fay my lord shall have the " last word, but he shall not, for I will: we thank " God we have the fword of power in our own hands, " and by the grace of God we will keep it, and it " shall not ruft, and I hope every lawful magistrate " will do as I do : and look to yourfelves, Gentlemen, " by the grace of God I'll root you out of the coun-" try." To which a forward man in the crowd faid, " Amen, throw them down ftairs." This the bifhop heard with filence, but the Mayor of the town took order for their fafety.

Two days after this difcourfe, the bishop wrote a very obliging letter to Mr Henry, to fignify to him how very much he was pleafed with the good temper and fpirit that he found in him at Ofwestry, and that he looked upon him as one that intended well, but laboured under prejudices; and to defire further acquaintance and converfation with him; particularly that he would come to him ftraitway to Wrexham; and about three months after, he fent for him again to Chefter ; in both which interviews a great deal of difcourfe, with much freedom, paffed between them in private, in which they feemed to vie nothing more than candor and obligingnefs, fhewing to each other S 2 all all meeknefs. I remember the bifhop was pleafed to fhew him his plan for the government of his diocefe, and the method he intended to take in church centures, which Mr Henry very well approved of ; but pleafantly told his lordfhip, he hoped he would take care that Juvenal's verfe fhould not be again verified, which the bifhop fmil'd at, and told him he would take care it fhould not. His lordfhip obferving his true catholick charity and moderation, told him, that if he were in his diocefe, he did not queftion but that he fhould find out fome way to make him ufeful. But all his reafonings could not fatisfy Mr Henry's confcience of the lawfulnefs of being re-ordain'd and conforming. The bifhop for fome years after, when he came that way, towards London, either call'd on Mr Henry at his houfe, or fent for him to him at Whitchurch, and ftill with all outward expressions of friendfhip.

The trouble which Mr Henry was in, about the meeting at Weston, obliged him for a while to keep his fabbaths at home fomewhat private; but in the year 1682 he took a greater liberty, and many flocked to him on Lord's days, through the kind connivance of the neighbouring magistrates : but in the year 1683, when the meetings were generally fuppreft throughout the kingdom, he was again neceffitated to contract his fails, and confine his labours more to his own family, and his friends that vifited him. He continued his attendance at Whitewell-chapel, as ufual; and when he was abridged of his liberty, he often bleffed God for his quietnefs. Once when one of the curates preached a bitter fermon against the diffenters, on a Lord's day morning; fome wondered that Mr Henry would go again in the afternoon, for the fecond part; "But (faith he) if he do not know his duty, I " know mine; and I blefs God I can find honey in a " carcafe."

In this time of treading down, and of perplexity, he flirred little abroad, being forced (as he used to exprefs it) to "throw the plough under the hedge;" but he preached conftantly at home without diffurbance: and often comforted himfelf with this, "When we can-" not do what we would, if we do what we can. "God will accept of us : when we cannot keep open " fhop, we muft drive a fecret trade." And he would fay, "There is a mean, if we could hit it, between "fool-hardinefs and faint-heartednefs." While he had fome opportunity of being ufeful at home, he was afraid left he fhould prejudice that by venturing abroad. One of his friends in London earneftly foliciting him to make a vifit thither in this time of reftraint in the country, he thus wrote to him; " I fhould be glad " once more to kife my native foil, though it were but " with a kifs of valediction ; but my indifposedness to " travel, and the fmall profpect there is of doing good " to countervail the pains, are my prevailing argu-" ments against it. I am here ('tis true) buried alive, " but I am quiet in my grave, and have no mind to " be a walking ghoft. We rejoice, and defire to be " thankful, that God hath given us a home, and con-" tinued it to us, when fo many, better than we, have " not where to lay their head, having no certain dwelling-place :" ('twas at the time of the difperfion of the French protestants.) "Why they exiles, and not we? they strangers in a strange land, and 66 " not we? We must not fay, we will die in our nests; " left God fay, nay: nor we will multiply our days " as that bird, the Phœnix, (referring to Job xxix. 18.) " left God fay, This night, &c. Our times and all " our ways are at his difpofe, abfolutely and univerfal-" ly, and it is very well they are fo."

At the time of the Duke of Monmouth's defcent, and the infurrection in the Weft, in the year 1685, Mr Henry, as many others, (purfuant to a general order of the Lord Lieutenant, for fecuring all fuspected perfons; and particularly all nonconformist ministers,) was taken up by a warrant from the deputy Lieutenants, and fent under a guard to Chefter Caltle, where he was about three weeks a clofe prifoner: he was lodged with fome gentlemen and ministers that were fetched thither out of Lancashire, who were all strangers to him; but he had great comfort in the acquaintance and fociety of many of them.

He often spake of this imprisonment, not as matter of complaint, but of thankfgiving, and bleffed God he was in nothing uneafy all the while. In a fermon to his family, the day after he came home, he largely and affectionately recounted the mercies of that providence : as for inftance, " That his imprifonment was " for no caufe: 'tis guilt that makes a prifon. That " it was his fecurity in a dangerous time. That he " had good company in his fufferings, who prayed " together, and read the Scriptures together, and dif-" courfed to their mutual edification. That he had " health there; not fick, and in prifon; that he was " vifited and prayed for by his friends. That he was " very chearful and eafy in his fpirit, many a time a-€4 fleep and quiet, when his adverfaries were disturbed " and unquiet. That his enlargement was fpeedy and " unfought for, and that it gave occasion to the magif-€ € trates who committed him, to give it under their " hands, that they had nothing in particular to lay to "" his charge; and especially that it was without a " fnare, which was the thing he feared more than any " thing elfe."

It was a furprife to fome that vifited him in his imprifonment, and were big with the expectations of the Duke of Monmouth's fuccefs, to hear him fay, " I " would not have you to flatter yourfelves with fuch " hopes, for God will not do his work for us in thefe " nations, by that man; but our deliverance and fal-" vation will arife fome other way."

It must not be forgotten how ready he was, nay, how studious and industrious to ferve and oblige such as had been any way instruments of trouble to him, as far as it lay in his power, and he had any opportunity to do it; fo well had he learned that great leffon of forgiving and loving enemies; of this it were eafy to give inflances.

When a gentleman who had fometimes been an inftrument of trouble to him, had occafion to make ufe of his help to give him fome light into a caufe he had to be tried, Mr Henry was very ready to ferve him in it; and though he might have declined it, and it was fomewhat againft his own intereft too, yet he appeared a witnefs for him, which fo won upon the gentleman, that he was afterwards more friendly to him. Mentioning in his diary the death of another gentleman in Shropfhire; he notes, that he was one that had been his profeffed enemy; " but (faith he) God knows I " have often prayed for him."

Some have wondered to fee how courteoufly and friendly he would fpeak to fuch as had been any way injurious to him, when he met with them, being as industrious to difcover his forgiving of wrongs, as fome are to difcover their refentments of them. It was faid of Archbishop Cranmer, that the way to have him ones friend, was to do him a difkindnefs; and I am fure it might be faid of Mr Henry, that doing him a difkindnefs would not make him ones enemy. This minds me of an exemplary passage concerning his worthy friend Mr Edward Lawrence, once going with fome of his fons, by the houfe of a gentleman that had been injurious to him, he gave a charge to his fons to this purpole, that they should never think or speak amils of that gentleman, for the fake of any thing he had done against him; but whenever they went by his houfe, fhould lift up their hearts in prayer to God for him and his family. And who is he that will harm those, who are thus followers of him that is good, in his goodnefs? It is almost the only temporal promise in the New Testament, which is made to the meek, Mat. v. 5. That they fhall inherit the earth ; the meming whereof Dr Hammond in his practical catechifin, takes takes to be especially this, that in the ordinary difpenfations of God's Providence, the most mild and quiet people are most free from disturbance. Those only have every man's hand against them, that have theirs against every man.

CHAP. VIII.

The last Nine years of his Life in liberty and enlargement at Broad-Oak, from the year 1687.

IT was in the latter end of the year 1685, when the ftream run fo very flrong against the diffenters, that Mr Henry being in difcourfe with a very great man of the church of England, mentioned K. Charles's indulgence in 1672, as that which gave rife to his flated preaching in a feparate affembly; and added, If the prefent king James should in like manner give me leave, I would do the fame again : to which that great man replied, "Never expect any fuch thing from him: " for take my word for it, he hates you nonconfor-" mifts in his heart." "Truly (faid Mr Henry) I " believe it, and I think he doth not love you of the " church of England neither." It was then little thought that the fame Right Reverend perfon who faid fo to him, fhould have the honour, as he had foon after, to be one of the feven bifhops committed to the Tower by king James: as it was alfo far from any ones expectation, that the fame king James fhould fo quickly give liberty to the nonconformifts: but we live in a world, wherein we are to think nothing ftrange, nor be furprifed at any turn of the wheel of nature, as 'tis called, James iii. 6.

The measures then taken by king James's Court and Council were foon laid open, not only to view, but to contempt, being in a short time, by the overruling Providence of God, broken and defeated: however, the indulgence granted to different in April 1687, 1637, must needs be a reviving to those who for fo many years had lain buried in filence and restraint; nor can any, who will allow themselves the liberty of fuppoling the case their own, wonder that they should rejoice in it, though the design of it being manifest, they could not chuse but rejoice with trembling. Mr Henry's fentiments of it were, "whatever mens ends " are in it, I believe God's end in it is to do us good."

There were many that faid, Surely the diffenters will not embrace the liberty which is intended only for a fnare to them. Mr Henry read and confidered the letter of advice to the differters at that juncture; but concluded, " Duty is ours, and events are God's." He remembred the experience he had had of the like in king Charles's time, and that did good and no hurt: and why might not this do fo too? " All power is " for edification, not for destruction." Did Jeremiah fit fill in the court of the prifon, becaufe he had his discharge from the king of Babylon? Nay, did not Paul, when he was perfecuted by his countrymen, for preaching the gospel, appeal to Cæsar, and find more kindnefs at Rome than he did at Jerufalein? In fhort, the principle of his conversation in the world being not fleshly wildom, or policy, but the grace of God, and particularly the grace of finiplicity and godly fincerity, he was willing to make the best of that which was, and to hope the best of the defign and iffue of it. Doubtlefs it was intended to introduce poperv; but it is certain, that nothing could arm people against popery more effectually than the plain and powerful preaching of the goipel; and thus they who granted that liberty, were out-fhot in their own bow, which manifestly appeared in the event and iffue. And as they did good fervice to the Protestant Religion among fcholars, who wrote fo many learned books against popery at that time, for which we return them our beft thanks; fo they did no lefs fervice among the common people who are the firength and body of the nation) that preached fo many good fermons to arm their hearers hearers against that strong delusion, which Mr Henry (as the rest of the nonconformists generally did) took all occasions to do. How often would he commend his hearers (as Dr Holland, Divinity professior in Oxford, was wont to do) " to the love of God, and the " hatred of Poperv."

Befides his preaching profeffedly to discover the errors and corruptions of the church of Rome (which he would have taken occasion to do more fully, had he feen those he preached to in any immediate danger of the infection) there could not be a more effectual antidote against popery, than the instructing and confirming of people in the truth, as it is in Jefus; and advancing the knowledge of and a value and veneration for the Holy Scriptures; to which, how much Mr Henry in his place did contribute, all that knew him will bear record. He used to observe, that the fall of Babylon followed upon the free and open preaching of the everlasting gospel, Rev. xiv. 6, 7. He apprehended this liberty likely to be of very fort continuance, and to end in trouble; and becaufe he could not fee now his not using of it would help to prevent the trouble; but he did fee, that his vigorous improvement of it would help to prepare for the trouble, he fet himfelf, with all diligence, to make the best use he could of this gleam, both at home and abroad, on Sabbath-days and week-days, to his power; yea, and beyond his power.

The great fubject of debate at this time in the nation, was, concerning the repeal of penal laws and tells. Mr Henry's thoughts were, as to the penal laws, that if those against the differences were all repealed, he would rejoice in it, and be very thankful both to God and man; for he would fometimes fay, without reflection upon any, he could not but look upon them as a national fin; and as for those against the Papists, if our law-givers see cause to repeal them in a regular way, I will endeavour (faith he) to make the best of it, and to fay, "The will of the Lord be done."

When

When king James came his progrefs into that country, in September 1687, to court the complements of the people, Mr Henry joined with feveral others, in and about Whitchurch, Nantwich, and Wem, in an addrefs to him, which was prefented when he lay at Whitchurch; the purport of which was, not to facrifice their lives and fortunes to him and to his intereft, but only to return him thanks for the liberty they had, with a promife to demean themfelves quietly in the ufe of it.

Some time after, Commissioners were sent abroad into the country, to enquire after the trouble that diffenters had fuftained by the penal laws; and how the money that was levied upon them was difposed of, little of it being found paid into the Exchequer: they fent to Mr Henry to have an account from him of his fufferings; he returned answer by letter, that he had indeed been fined fome years before, for a conventicle, and diffrained upon, and his goods carried away; which all the country knew, and to which he referred himfelf. But being required to give a particular account of it upon oath; though he faid he could be glad to fee fuch instruments of trouble legally removed; yet he declined giving any further information concerning it; having (as he wrote to the Commiffioners) " long fince, from his heart, forgiven all the agents. " inftruments and occasions of it; and having purpof-" ed never to fay any thing more of it."

It was on Tuefday, June 14, 1681, that he was difturbed at Wefton in Shropfhire, when he was preaching on Pfal. lxvi. 18. and on Tuefday, June 14, 1687, that day fix years he preached there again without diffurbance, finifhing what he was then prevented from delivering, concerning prayer, and going on to ver. 19, 20. "But verily God hath heard me----bleffed be "God"----concerning the duty of thankfgiving. This feventh year of their filence and reftraint, proved, through God's wonderful good providence, the year of releafe. 148 The Life of Mr PHILIP HENRY.

In May, 1688, a new commission of the peace came down for the county of Flint, in which (by whofe intereft or procurement was not known) Mr Henry was nominated a Juffice of Peace for that county. It was no finall furprise to him, to receive a letter from the Clerk of the Peace, directed to Philip Henry, Efg. acquainting him with it, and appointing him when and whither, to come to be fworn. To which he returned anfwer, that he was very fenfible of his unworthinefs of the honour, and his unfitness for the office which he was nominated to, and therefore defired to be excufed, and he was fo, and did what he could that it might not be fpoken of in the country. There were fome, who upon this occasion unhappily remembered, that a few years before, a reverend clergyman in Shroofhire told Mr Henry to his face, that he had done more milchief in the country, than any man that ever came into it; and that he himfelf hoped flortly to be in the commission of peace, and then he would rid the country of him. But alas he was quite difappointed. Thus honour is like the fhadow, which flies from those that pursue it, and follows those that flee from it.

For two years after this liberty began, Mr Henry ftill continued his attendance, as usual, at Whitewellchapel, whenever there was preaching there; and he preached at his own house only when there was no fupply there, and in the evening of those days when there was. For doing thus he was greatly clamoured against, by some of the rigid separatists, and called a diffembler, and one that halted between two, and the like. Thus (as he notes in his diary) one fide told him he was the author of all the mifchief in the country. in drawing people from the church ; and the other fide told him, he was the author of all the mifchief, in drawing people to the church: and "which of " thefe (faith he) fhall I feek to pleafe : Lord, neither, " but thyfelf alone, and my own confcience, and " while I can do that, I have enough."

In a fermion at Whitewell-chapel, one Lord's day in the afternoon, where he and his family, and many of his congregation were attending, much was faid with fome keen reflections, to prove the differences fchifmaticks, and in a damnable flate : when he came immediately after to preach at his own houfe, before he began his fermion, he expressed himfelf to this purpose; "Perhaps fome of you may expect now that I should "fay fomething in answer to what we have heard, by "which we have been fo feverely charged; but truly "I have fomething elfe to do;" and fo, without any further notice taken of it, went on to preach Jefus Chrift and him crucified.

It was not without fome fear and trembling that Mr Henry received the tidings of the Prince of Orange's landing, in November 1688, as being fomewhat in the dark concerning the clearnefs of his call, and dreading what might be the confequence of it. He ufed to fay, "Give peace in our time, O Lord," was a prayer that he would heartily fet his Amen to. But when fecret things were brought to light, and a regular courfe was taken to fill the vacant throne with fuch a King and fuch a Queen, none rejoiced in it more heartily than he did. He celebrated the national thankfgiving for that great deliverance, with an excellent fermon on that text, Rom. viii. 31. "What " fhall we then fay to thefe things? If God be for us, " who can be againft us?"

Soon after that happy fettlement, there were overtures made towards a comprehension of the moderate diffenters, with the church of England; which Mr Henry most carness defined, and wished for, if it could be had upon any terms lefs than finning against his conficience; for never was any more averse to that which looked like a separation than he was, if he could possibly have helped it, Jalva conficientia. His prayers were constant, and his endeavours, as he had opportunity, that there might be some healing methods found out and agreed upon. But it is well known what was the the var cleri at that time, viz. That for a funch as the oaths, fubicriptions, and ceremonies were imposed only to keep out fuch men, they would never confent to their removal, for the letting them in again. Notumus leves angliæ mutari, was a faying perverted to this purpole: and the fixed principle was, Better a fchifm without the church, than a faction within it, &c. This was at that time published and owned, as the fense of the clergy in convocation; which temper and refolve, fo contrary to that which might have been expected, upon that happy and glorious revolution, did a little alter his fentiments in that matter, and he faw himfelf perfectly driven from them. Defpairing therefore to fee an accommodation, he fet himfelf the more vigoroufly to improve the prefent liberty. In June 1689, the act of indulgence paffed, which not only tolerated, but allowed the diffenters' meetings, and took them under the protection of the government.

Soon after which, though he never in the leaft changed his judgement, as to the lawfulnefs of joining in the common-praver, but was still ready to do it occafionally, yet the minifters that preached at Whitewell-chapel, being often uncertain in their coming, which kept his meeting at Broad-Oak at like uncertainties, to the frequent difappointment of many of his hearers that came from far; he was at last prevailed with to preach at public time every Lord's day, which he continued to do while he lived, much to his own fatisfaction. and the fatisfaction of his friends. An eminent minister in Lancashire, who did in like manner alter his practice about that time, gave this for a reafon, " That he had been for twenty-feven years ftriv-" ing to pleafe a generation of men, who after all " would not be pleafed, and therefore he would no " longer endeavour it as he had done."

It may be of use to give fome account how he managed his ministerial work in the latter part of his time, wherein he had as fignal tokens of the prefence of God with him, as ever; enabling him still to bring forth fruit fruit in old age, and to renew his youth like the eagles. Though what he did he ftill did gratis, and would do fo, yet he was not willing to have any conftant affiitant, nor had he any; fo much was he in his element, when he was about his Mafter's work : 'twas his meat and drink to do it.

1. As to his conftant Sabbath work, he was uniform and abundant in it. He began his morning family worship, on Lord's days, at eight o'clock, when he read and expounded pretty largely, fung a pfalm and prayed; and many ftrove to come time enough to join with him in that fervice. He began in public just at nine o'clock Winter and Summer. His meetingplace was an out-building of his own, near adjoining to his house, fitted up very decently and conveniently for the purpose. He began with prayer, then he fung Pfal. c. without reading the line; next he read and expounded a chapter in the Old Teftament in the morning, and in the New Teftament in the afternoon. He looked upon the public reading of the fcriptures in religious affemblies to be an ordinance of God, and that it tended very much to the edification of people by that ordinance, to have what is read expounded to them. The bare reading of the word, he used to compare to the throwing of a net into the water; but the expounding of it, is like the fpreading out of that net, which makes it the more likely to catch fifh; efpecially as he managed it with practical profitable obfervations. Some that have heard him read a chapter with this thought, how will he make fuch a chapter as this uleful to us? have been furprized with fuch pertinent, uleful instructions, as they have owned to be as much for their edification as any fermon. And commonly when he had expounded a chapter, he would defire them when they came home to read it over, and recollect fome of those things that had been fpoken to them out of it,

In his expounding of the Old Teftament, he induftrioufly fought for fomething in it concerning Chrift, who who is the true treafure hid in the field, the true manna hid in the dew of the Old Teftament. Take one inflance; the last Sabbath that ever he fpent with his children at Chefter, in the public morning worfhip, he read and expounded the last chapter of the book of Job: after he had gone through the chapter, and obferved what he thought fit out of it, he expressed himfelf to this purpofe: " When I have read a chapter " in the Old Teftament, I ufe to enquire what there " is in it that points at Chrift, or is any way appli-" cable to Chrift; here is in this chapter a great deal " of Job; but is there nothing of Chrift here? Yes; " you have heard of the patience of Job, and have " in him feen the end of the Lord. This in Job is " applicable to Chrift, that after he had patiently " gone through his fufferings, he was appointed an " interceffor for his unkind friends, ver. 8." ' Go to " my fervant Job, and my fervant Job shallspray for you, " for him will I accept." " If any one hath an errand " to God, let him go to Jefus Chrift, and put it into " his hand, for there is no acceptance to be hoped " for with God, but by him, who is his beloved Son; " not only with whom he is well pleafed, but in whom " viz. with us in him : he hath made us accepted in " the beloved."

After the exposition of the chapter he fung a pfalm, and commonly chofe a pfalm fuitable to the chapter he had expounded; and would briefly tell his hearers how they might fing that pfalm with underftanding, and what affections of foul fhould be working towards God in the finging of it: his hints of that kind were of great ufe, and contributed much to the right performance of that fervice; he often faid, " The more " finging of pfalms there is in our families and con-" gregations on Sabbath days, the more like they are " to heaven, and the more there is in them of the " everlafting Sabbath." He would fay fometimes, he loved to fing whole pfalms, rather than pieces of pfalms.

After the fermon in the morning, he fung the cxvii. Pfalm, without reading the line.

He intermitted at noon about an hour and a half, and on facrament days not near fo long, in which time he took fome little refreshment in his study, making no folemn dinner; yet many of his friends did partake of his carnal, as well as of his fpiritual things, as those did that followed Christ, of whom he was careful they fhould not faint by the way. The morning fermon was repeated, by a ready writer, to those that ftaid in the meeting-place, as many did, and when that was done, he began the afternoon's exercife, in which he not only read and expounded a chapter, but catechifed the children, and expounded the carecterne briefly before fermon. Thus did he go from threagth to ftrength, and from duty to duty, on Sabbath-days running the ways of God's commandments with an enlarged heart. And the variety, and vivacity of his public fervices, made them exceeding pleafant to all that join'd with him, who never had caufe to complain of his being tedious. He used to fay, "Every minute " of Sabbath-time is precious, and none of it to be " loft;" and that he fcarce thought the Lord's day well spent, if he were not weary in body at night; wearied with his work, but not weary of it, as he uled to diftinguish. He would fay fometimes to those about him, when he had gone through the duties of a Sabbath; "Well, if this be not the way to Heaven, " I do not know what is." In preffing people to number their days, he would efpecially exhort them to number their Sabbath-days, how many they have been, and how ill they have been fpent; how few 'tis like they may be, that they may be fpent better : and to help in the account, he would fay, that " for every " twenty years of our lives, we enjoy above a thou-" fand Sabbaths," which must all be accounted for in the day of reckoning.

As to his conftant preaching, it was very fubftantial and elaborate, and greatly to edification. He used to ΤI fay, fay, he could not flarch in his preaching; that is, he would not; as knowing where the language and expreffion is ftiff, and forced, and fine (as they call it) it doth not reach the greatest part of the hearers. When he grew old he would fay, fure he might now take a greater liberty to talk (as he called it) in the pulpit; that is, to fpeak familiarly to people; yet to the laft he abated not in his preparations for the pulpit, nor ever delivered any thing raw and undigested; much lefs any thing unbecoming the gravity and ferioufnefs of the work. If his preaching were talking, it were talking to the purpofe. His fermons were not common place, but even when his fubjects were the most plain and trite, yet his management of them was ufually peculiar and furprifing. In those years, as formerly, he kept for the most part in a method for subjects, and was very feldom above one Sabbath upon a text. And his conftant practice was, as it had been before, when he concluded a fubject that he had been a good while upon, he fpent one Sabbath in a brief rehearfal of the marrow and fubstance of the many fermons he preached upon it; which he called the clenching of the nail, that it might be as a nail in a fure place. So very industrious was he, and no lefs ingenious in his endeavours, that his hearers might be " able, after " his decease, to have these things always in remem-" brance, 2 Pet. i. 15. and it is hoped, that by the bleffing of God, the effect did not altogether difappoint his expectation. In the latter times of his ministry, he would often contrive the heads of his fermons to begin with the fame letter, or rather two and two of a letter; but he did not at all feem to affect or force it; only if it fell in naturally and eafily, he thought it a good help to memory, and of use, especially to the younger fort. And he would fay, the chief reafon why he did it was, because 'tis frequently observed in the fcripture, particularly the book of Pfalms. And though it be not a fashionable ornament of discourse, if it be a feripture ernament, that is fufficient to recommend

it,

it, at leaft to juffify it against the imputation of childithness; (Mr Porter of Whitchurch very much used it, fo did Mr Malden.) But the excellency of his fermons lay chiefly in the enlargements, which were always very folid, grave, and judicious; but in expreffing and marshalling his heads, he often condescended below his own judgment, to help his hearers' memories. Some of his subjects (when he had finished them) he made fome fhort memorandums of in verse, a diftich or two of each Sabbath's work, and gave them out in writing, among the young ones of his congregation, many of whom wrote them, and learned them, and profited by them.

It might be of use (cfpecially to those who had the happinels of fitting under his ministry) to give some account of the method of his Sabbath subjects, during the last eight or nine years of his ministry; and it was designed, till 'twas found 'twould swell this narrative into too great a bulk.

2. As to the administration of the factaments, those mysteries of God, which ministers are the stewards of.

As to the facrament of baptifm, he had never (that I know of) baptized any children (except his own) from the time he was turned out in 1662, till this laft liberty came, though often defired to do it :- fuch-was the tender=regard he had to the eftablished church; but now he revived the administration of that ordinance in his congregation. The occafion was this; one of the parifh-minifters preaching at Whitewellchapel, Mr Henry and his family, and many of his friends being prefent, was earneftly cautioning people not to go to conventicles, and ufed this as an argument against it, " That they were Laptized into the church " of England :"" Mr Henry's catholic charity could not well digeft this monopolizing of the great ordinance of baptifm, and thought it time to bear his teftimony against fuch narrow principles, which he ever expressed his diflike of in all parties and perfwafions. Accordingly he took the next opportunity that offered 11 2 itfelf, itfelf, publickly to baptize a child, and defired the congregation to bear witnefs, " That he did not baptize " that child into the church of England, nor into the " church of Scotland, nor into the church of the dif-" fenters, nor into the church at Broad-Oak, but in-" to the vifible catholic church of Jefus Chrift." After this he baptized very many, and always publickly, though being in the country they were commonly carried a good way. The public administration of baptifm he not only judged most agreeable to the nature and end of the ordinance, but found to be very profitable and edifying to the congregation; for he always took that occafion, not only to explain the nature of the ordinance, but affectionately and pathetically to excite people duly to improve their baptifm. He ufually received the child immediately out of the hands of the parent that prefented it, and returned it into the fame hands again, with this or the like charge, " Take " this child, and bring it up for God." He used to fay, that one advantage of public baptifin was, that there were many to join in prayer for the child, in which therefore, and in bleffing God for it, he was ufually very large and particular. After he had baptized the child, before he gave it back to the parent, he commonly used these words; "We receive this " child into the congregation of Chrift's church, hav-" ing washed it with water, in the name of the Father, " and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoft, in token " that hereafter it shall not be ashamed to confess " Chrift crucified, and manfully to fight, &c."

He baptized many adult perfons, that through the error of their parents were not baptized in infancy, and fome in public.

The folemn ordinance of the Lord's fupper he conftantly celebrated in his congregation once a month, and always to a very confiderable number of communicants. He did not ufually obferve public days of preparation for that ordinance, other than as they fell in courfe in the weekly lectures : nor did he ever appropriate priate any particular fubject of his preaching to Sacrament-days, having a great felicity in adapting any profitable fubject to fuch an occafion : and he would fay, What did the primitive chriftians do, when they celebrated the Lord's fupper every Lord's day ? His administration of this ordinance was very folemn and affecting. He had been wont to go about in the congregation, and to deliver the elements with his own hand ; but in his latter time, he delivered them only to thofe near him, and fo they were handed from one to another, with the affiftance of one who fupplied the office of a deacon, as having alfo the cuftody and difpofal of the money gathered for the ufe of the poor; Mr Henry taking and carefully keeping a particular account of it.

Such as defired to be admitted to the Lord's fupper, he first difcourfed with concerning their spiritual ftate; and how the cafe stood between God and their fouls; not only to examine them, but to instruct and teach them, and to encourage them as he faw occafion; gently leading those whom he difcerned to be ferious, though weak and timorous; he usually difcourfed with them more than once, as finding precept upon precept, and line upon line necessary: but he did it with fo much mildness, and humility, and tenderness, and endeavour to make the best of every body, as did greatly affect and win upon many. He was herein like our great Master, who " can have compaf-" fion on the ignorant," and doth not " defpise the " day of fmall things."

But his admiffion of young people out of the rank of catechumens into that of communicants, had a peculiar folemning in it. Such as he catechized, when they grew up to lome years of difcretion, if he obferved them to be intelligent and ferious, and to fet their faces heaven-wards; he marked them out to be admitted to the Lord's fupper; and when he had a competent number of fuch, twelve or fifteen perhaps, or more; he ordered each of them to come to him feverally.

rally, and discourfed with them of the things belonging to their everlafting peace; put it to their choice whom they would ferve; and endeavoured to affect them with those things with which by their catechisms they had been made acquainted; drawing them with the cords of a man, and the bands of love, into the way which is called holy. For feveral Lord's days he catechized them, particularly in public, touching the Lord's fupper, and the duty of preparation for it, and their baptilinal covenant, which in that ordinance they were to take upon themfelves, and to make their own act and deed. Often telling them upon fuch occasions, that they were not to oblige themfelves to any more than what they were already obliged to by their baptifm, only to bind themfelves faster to it. Then he appointed a day in the week before the ordinance; when in a folemn affembly on purpose, he prayed for them, and preached a fermon to them, proper to their age and circumstances: and fo the following Sabbath they were all received together to the Lord's fupper. This he looked upon as the right confirmation, or transition, into the state of adult church-membership. The more folemn our covenanting with God is, the more deep and the more durable the impressions are likely to be. He hath recorded it in his diary, upon one of these occasions, as his heart's defire and prayer for those who were thus admitted, " That it might " be as the day of their espoufals to the Lord Jefus, " and that they might each of them have a wedding " garment."

3. The difcipline he observed in his congregation was, not such as he could have wished for, but the best he could get, confidering what a feattered flock he had, which was his trouble, but it could not be helped. He would fometimes apply to the circumstances he was in, that of Moses, Deut. xii. 8, 9. However, 1 see not but the end was effectually attained by the methods he took, though there wanted the formality of officers and church-meetings for the purpose. If he heard of any that walked diforderly, he fent for them, and reproved them, gently or fharply, as he faw the cafe required. If the fin had fcandal in it, he fufpended them from the ordinance of the Lord's fupper, till they gave fome tokens of their repentance and reformation. And where the offence was public and grofs, his judgement was, that fome public fatisfaction fhould be made to the congregation before re-admif-But whatever offence did happen, or breaches fion. of the christian peace, Mr Henry's peculiar excellency lay in reftoring with the fpirit of meeknefs; which, with his great prudence, and love, and condefcention, did fo much command the refpects of his people, and win upon them, that there was a universal fatisfaction in all his management; and it may truly be faid of him, as it was of David, 2 Sam. iii. 36. that " what-" foever he did pleafed all the people." And it is an inftance and evidence, that those ministers who will rule by love and meeknefs, need no laws or canons to rule by, other than those of the holy fcripture. " How forcible are right words! Job vi. 25.

4. He was very first and very ferious in observing the public fafts appointed by authority, and called them a delight. He had feldom any one to affift him in carrying on the duties of those days, but performed the fervice of them himfelf alone. He began at nine of the clock, or quickly after, and never flirred out of the pulpit till about four in the afternoon, fpending all that time in praying and expounding, and finging, and preaching, to the admiration of all that heard him, who were generally more on fuch days than ufual. And he was fometimes observed to be more warm and lively towards the latter end of the duties of a faftday, than at the beginning; as if the fpirit were molt willing and enlarged when the flesh was most weak. In all his performances on public faft-days, he did, bee agere, attend to that which was the proper work of the day; every thing is beautiful in its feafon. His prayers and pleadings with God on those days, were epfecially efpecially for national mercies, and the pardon of national fins : how excellently did he order the caufe before God, and fill his mouth with arguments in his large and particular interceffions for the land, for the king, the government, the army, the navy, the church, the French Protestants, &c. He was another Jacob. a wreftler, an Ifrael, a prince with God. Before a fastday he would be more than ordinarily inquifitive concerning the flate of public affairs, as Nehemiah was, Nch. i. 2. that he might know the better how to order his prayers and preaching : for on fuch a day (he hath fometimes faid) " as good fay nothing, as no-" thing to the purpofe." He made it his bufinefs on faft-days, to fhew people their transgressions, especially the houfe of Jacob their fins. "'Tis most proper (faid " he) to preach of Chrift on Lord's-days, to preach of fin on fast-days, and to preach duty on both. He went over the third chapter of the Revelation, in the fast-fermons of two years. Another year he preached over the particulars of that charge, Zeph. iii. 2. Hypocrify in hearers, and flattery in preachers (as he would fometimes fay) is bad at any time, but it is efpecially abominable upon a day of humiliation.

5. He preached a great many lectures in the country about, fome stated, fome occasional, in supplying of which he was very indefatigable. He hath fome- . times preached a lecture, ridden eight or nine miles, and preached another, and the next day two more: to guicken himfelf to diligence he would often fay, " our opportunities are paffing away, and we muft " work while it is day, for the night cometh." Once having very wet and foul weather to go through to preach a lecture, he faid, he comforted himfelf with two foriptures ; one was 2 Tim. ii. 3. "Endure hard-" nefs as a good foldier of Jefus Chrift." The other (becaufe he exposed and hazarded his health, for which fome blamed him) was 2 Sam. vi. 21. "It was before " the Lord." He took all occafions in his lectures abroad, to poffefs the minds of people with fober and moderate moderate principles, and to flir them up to the ferious regard of those things wherein we are all agreed. "We are not met here together (faid he once in an exhortation, with which he often began at his lecture) "because we think ourselves better than others, "but because it is our defire to be better than we "are."

He was very happy in the choice of his fubjects for his week-day lectures. At one which was flated, he preached againft errors in general, from James i. 16. " Do not err, my beloved brethren;" particularly from divers other feriptures he flewed, that we mult not err, concerning God and Chrift, and the Spirit; concerning fin and repentance, faith and good works; concerning God's ordinances; concerning grace and peace, and afflictions and profperity, and the things of the life to come.

At the monthly lectures he delivered at his own house, he chose to preach upon the four last things, death and judgment, heaven and hell, in many particulars, but commonly a new text for every fermon. When he had in many fermons finished the first of the four, one that used to hear him fometimes, enquiring of his progress in his fubjects, asked him if he had done with death? meaning that fubiect concerning death; to which he pleafantly replied, " No, I have not done " with him yet; I must have another turn with him, " and he will give me a fall; but I hope to have the " victory at laft." He would fometimes remove the lectures in the country from one place to another, for the benefit of those that could not travel. Once having adjourned a lecture to a new place, he began it there with a fermion on Acts xvii. 6. "Thefe men that " have turned the world upfide down, are come hither " alfo;" in which he flewed how falfe the charge is as they meant it; for religion doth not dilturb the peace of families or focieties, doth not caufe any diforder or unquietness, &c. And yet, that in another fenfe there is a great truth in it; that when the gofpel comes Х in in power to any foul, it turns the world upfide down in that foul; fuch is the change it makes there.

All this he did gratis, and without being burthenfome to any; nay, he was beft pleafed, when at the places where he preached, nothing was got for his entertainment, but he came home (though fome miles) fafting; as in other places it was a trouble to him to fee his friends careful about much ferving, though it was out of their refpect to him.

Laftry, As he was an excellent preacher himfelf, fo he was an exemplary hearer of the word, when others preached, though every way his inferiors; fo reverent, ferious, and attentive, was he in hearing, and fo obfervant of what was fpoken. I have heard him tell, that he knew one (and I suppose it was as Paul knew a man in Chrift) who could truly fay, to the glory of God, that for forty years he had never flept at a fermon. He was diligent alfo to improve what he heard afterwards by meditations, repetition, prayer, and difcourfe; and he was a very great encourager of young ministers that were humble and ferious, though their abilities and performances were but mean. He hath noted in his diary, (as that which affected him,) this faving of a godly man, a hearer of his, " I find it eafier " to go fix miles to hear a fermon, than to fpend one " quarter of an hour in meditating and praying over " it in fearet (as I fhould) when I come home."

As to the circumflances of his family in the laft nine years of his life, they were fomewhat different from what they had been; but the fame candle of God which had fhined upon his tabernaele, continued ftill to do fo. In the years 1687, and 1688, he married all his five children; the three eldeft in four months time, in the year 1687, and the other two in a year and a half aiter; fo many fwarms (as he ufed to call them) out of his hive; and all not only with his full confent, but to his abundant comfort and fatisfaction. He would fay, he thought it the duty of parents to ftudy to oblige their children in that alfair. And the never never could children be more eafy and at reft in a father's house than his were, yet he would fometimes tay concerning them, as Naomi to Ruth, Ruth iii. 1. " Shall I not feek reft for thee?" 'Two advices he ufed to give, both to his children and others, in their choice of that relation : One was, " Keep within the " bonds of profession," fuch as one may charitably hope is from a good principle. The other was, "Look " at fuitablenefs," in age, quality, education, temper, &c. He used to observe from Gen. ii. 18. "I will make " him a help meet for him;" that where there is not meetnefs, there will not be much help. And he would commonly fay to his children, with reference to that choice, " Pleafe God, and pleafe yourfelves, and vou " fhall never difpleafe me;" and greatly blamed those parents, who conclude matches for their children, and do not afk counfel at their mouth. He never aimed at great things in the world for his children, but fought for them in the first place the kingdom of God, and the righteoufnefs thereof. He used to mention fometimes the faying of a pious gentlewoman, that had many daughters : " The care of most people, is how to " get good husbands for their daughters; but my care " is to fit my daughters to be good wives, and then " let God provide for them." In this, as in other things, Mr Henry fleered by that principle; That " a " man's life confisteth not in the abundance of the " things that he poffeffeth." And it pleafed God fo to order it, that all his children were disposed of, into circumstances very agreeable and comfortable, both for life and godlinefs. He was greatly affected with the goodness of God to him herein, without any forecaft or contrivance of his own. "The country (faith " he in his diary) takes notice of it, and what then " fhall I render ?" Surely this is a token for good.

All his four daughters' were married at Whitewellchapel, and he preached a wedding fermon for each of them, in his own family, after. He would often tell his friends, that those who defire, in the married con- $X_2$  dition. dition, to live in the favour of God, must enter upon that condition in the fear of God. For it's an ill omen to stumble at the threshold : and an error in the first concoclion, is feldom amended in the fecond.

While he lived, he had much comfort in all his children and their yoke-fellows, and fomewhat the more, that by the Divine Providence, four of the five families which branched out of his, were fettled in Chefter.

His youngest daughter was married April 26, 1688, the fame day of the year (as he observes in his diary) and the fame day of the week, and in the fame place that he was married to his dear wife, twenty-eight years before; upon which this is his remark, "I can-" not defire for them, that they should receive more " from God than we have received, in that relation " and condition; but I would defire, and do defire, " that they may do more for God in it than we have " done." His usual compliment to his new-married friends, was, Others wish you all happiness, I wish you all holiness, and then there is no doubt but you will have all happiness.

When the marriage of the laft of his daughters was about to be concluded on, he thus writes; "But is " Jofeph gone, and Simeon gone, and must Benjamin " go alfo ? we will not fay that all thefe things are " against us, but for us : if we must be thus in this " merciful way bereaved of our children, let us be be-" reaved; and God turn it for good to them, as we " know he will, if they love and fear his name." And when, some time after she was married, he parted with her to the house of her husband, he thus writes ; "We " have fent her away, not as Laban faid he would " have fent his daughters away, with mirth, and with " fongs, with tabret, and with harp, but with prayers " and tears, and hearty good wifhes :" " And now " (faith he in his diary) we are alone again, as we " were in our beginning; God be better to us than " twenty children." Upon the fame occafion he thus writes writes to a dear relation: "We are now left as we "were, one and one, and yet but one; the Lord, I "truft, that has brought us thus far, will enable us "to finifh well; and then all will be well, and not till "then."

That which he often mentioned, as the matter of his great comfort that it was fo, and his defire that it might continue fo, was, the love and unity that was among his children; and that (as he writes) the tranfplanting of them into new relations, had not leffened that love, but rather increafed it; for this he often gave thanks to the God of love; noting from Job i. 4. That the childrens love to one another is the parents comfort and joy. In his laft will and teftament, this is the prayer which he puts up for his children, "That " the Lord would build them up in holinefs, and con-" tinue them ftill in brotherly love, as a bundle of " arrows which cannot be broken."

When his children were removed from him, he was a daily interceffor at the throne of grace for them and their families. Still the burnt-offerings were offered according to the number of them all. He used to fay, " Surely the children of fo many prayers will not mif-" carry." Their particular circumstances of affliction and danger, were fure to be mentioned by him with fuitable petitions. The greatest affliction he faw in his family was the death of his dear daughter-in-law, Catharine, theonly daughter of Samuel Hardware. Efg. who, about a year and a half after she was transplanted into his family (to which fhe was the greatest comfort and ornament imaginable) died of the fmall pox in child-bed, upon the thankfgiving day for king William's coming in. She died but a few weeks after Mr Henry had married the last of his daughters, upon which marriage fhe had faid, " Now we have a full " leafe, God only knows which life will drop firft." She comforted herfelf in the extremity of her illnefs with this word, "Well, when I come to heaven, I " shall fee that I could not have been without this af-" fiction."

166 The Life of Mr Phillip HENRY.

" fliction." She had been for fome time before under fome fears as to her fpiritual state, but the clouds were through grace difpelled, and fhe finished her courfe with joy, and a chearful expectation of the glory to be revealed. When the lay ill, Mr Henry (being in fear not only for her that was ill, but for the reft of his children in Chefter, who had none of them past the pikes of that perilous distemper) wrote thus to his fon, on the evening of the Lord's day, "I have " just done the public work of this day, wherein, be-" fore many fcores of witneffes, many of whom I dare " fay, are no little concerned for you : I have abfo-" lutely, freely, and unrefervedly given you all up to " the good will and pleafure of our heavenly Father, " waiting what he will do with us, for good I am fure " we have received, and fhall we not receive evil alfo? He preached at Chefter, upon occasion of that fad breach in his family, on Job x. 3. " Shew me where-" fore thou contended with me."

When two of his children lay ill, and in perilous circumftances, after he had been wreftling with God in prayer for them, he wrote thus in his diary: "If "the Lord will be pleafed to grant me my requeft "this time concerning my children, I will not fay as "the beggars at our door ufe to do, I'll never afk any "thing of him again; but, on the contrary, he fhall hear oftner from me than ever; and I will love God "the better, and love prayer the better, as long as I "live." He ufed to fay, trades-men take it ill, if thofe that are in their books go to another flop: while we are fo much indebted to God for paft mercies, we are bound to attend him for further mercies.

As he was an interceffor for his children at the throne of grace, fo he was upon all occafions a remembrancer to them, both by word and letter, to quicken them to that which is good. How often did he inculcate this upon them? "Love one another, and the God of love " and peace will be with you. Do all you can, while " you are together, to help one another to heaven, that " you " you may be together there, for ever, and with the "Lord." When the families of his children were in health and peace, the candle of God fhining upon their" tabernacles, he wrote thus to them, "'Twas one of "Job's comforts in his profperity, that his children "loved one another, and feafted together: the fame is ours in you, which God continue. But you will not be offended, if we pray that you may none of you curfe God in your hearts. Remember, the wheel is always in motion, and the fpoke that is uppermoft will be under, and therefore mix tremblings " always with your joy."

He much rejoiced in the vifits of his children, and made that as other things, which were the matter of his rejoicing, the matter of his thankfgiving. His ufual faying at parting, was, "This is not the world we are "to be together in, and 'tis well it is not; but there "is fuch a world before us:" and his ufual prayer was, "that our next meeting might be either in heav-"en, or further on in our way towards it."

He had in eight years time twenty-four grand-children born, fome by each of his children; concerning whom he would often blefs God, that they were all " the fealed ones of the God of heaven, and enrolled " among his lambs." On the birth of his fecond grand-child, at a troublefome time as to public affairs, he thus writes, "I have now feen my childrens chil-" dren, let me alfo fee peace upon Ifrael; and then I " will fay, Lord, now letteft thou thy fervant depart." Some were much affected with it, when he baptized two of his grand-children together at Chefter, publickly, and preached on Gen. xxxiii. 5. " They are the " children which God hath gracioufly given thy fer-" vant." He observed in what a favory, pious, gracious manner Jacob speaks. He had spoken good fenfe if he had only faid, they are my children; but then he had not fpoken like Jacob, like one that had fo lately feen the face of God. Though our fpeech be not always of grace, yet it must be always with grace, grace ` 168 The Life of Mr Phillip Henry.

grace poured into the lips. There is a kind of language, the air of which speaks it the language of Canaan; christians should speak like christians.

It was not long after his children were married from him, but his houfe was filled again with the children of feveral of his friends, whom he was, by much importunity, perfuaded to take to table with him. All that knew him, thought it a thousand pities, that fuch a mafter of a family should have but a small family, and fhould not have many to fit down under his shadow. He was first abnost necessitated to it, by the death of his dear friend and kinfman, Mr Benyon of Afh, who left his children to his care. Some he took gratis, or for fmall confideration; and when by reafon of the advances of age he could not go about fo much as he had done, doing good, he laid out himfelf to do the more at home. He kept a teacher to attend their fchool learning; and they had the benefit, not only of his infpection in that, but (which was much more) his family-worship, Sabbath instructions, catechizing and daily converfe, in which his tongue was as choice filver, and his lips fed many. Nothing but the hopes of doing fome good to the rifing generation could have prevailed with him to take this trouble upon him. He would often fay, "We have a bufy house, but " there is a reft remaining. We must be doing fome-" thing in the world while we are in it; but this fash-" ion will not last long, methinks I fee it passing a-" way."

Sometimes he had fuch with him as had gone through their courfe of Univerfity learning, at private academies, and defired to fpend fome time in his family, before their entrance upon the miniftry; that they might have the benefit, not only of his public and family inftructions, but of his learned, pious converfe, in which, as he was throughly furnifhed, for every good word and work, fo he was very free and communicative. The great thing which he ufed to prefs upon those who intended the ministry, was to ftudy the feriptures, tures, and make them familiar. Bonus textuarius eft bonus thelogus, was a maxim he often minded them of. For this purpofe he recommended to them the fludy of the Hebrew, that they might be able to fearch the fcriptures in the original. He also advised them to the use of an interleaved Bible, wherein to infert fuch expositions and observations as occur occasionally in fermons or other books; which, he would fay, are more happy and confiderable fometimes, than those that are found in the professed commentators. When some young men delired the happiness of coming into his family, he would tell them, "You come to me as " Naaman did to Elifha, expecting that I fhould do " this and t'other for you; and alas, I can but fay as " he did, Go wath in Jordan;-Go, ftudy the fcriptures. " I profefs to teach no other learning but feripture " learning." It was but a little before he died, that in reading Ifa. l. he observed from ver. 4. " The Lord " hath given me the tongue of the learned," &c. That the true learning of a golpel minister confists that in being able to talk Latin fluently, and to difpre a. philofophy, but in being able to fpeak a word in feafon to weary fouls. He that knows how to do that well, is a learned minifter.

CHAP. IX.

His ficknefs, Death, and Burial.

IN the time of his health, he made death very familiar to himfelf by frequent and pleafing thoughts and meditations of it; and endeavoured to make it fo to his friends, by fpeaking often of it. His letters and difcourfes had ftill fomething or other which fpoke his conftant expectations of death; thus did he learn to die daily; and it is hard to fay, whether it was more eafy to him to fpeak, or uneafy to his friends, to hear him fpeak of leaving the world. This minds me of a paffage I was told by a worthy Scotch minifter, Mr Y Patrick Adair, that vifiting the famous Mr Durham of Glafgow, in his laft ficknefs, which was long and lingering: he faid to him, "Sir, I hope you have fo fet " all in order, that you have nothing elfe to do but " to die:" "I blefs God (faid Mr Durham) I have " not had that to do either thefe many years." Such is the comfort of dying daily, when we come to die indeed.

Mr Henry's conflictution was but tender, and yet by the bleffing of God upon his great temperance, and care of his diet, and moderate exercise by walking in the air, he did for many years enjoy a good meafure of health, which he ufed to call " The fugar that fweet-" ens all temporal mercies," for which therefore we ought to be very thankful, and of which we ought to be very careful. He had fometimes violent fits of the cholick, which would be very afflictive for the time. Towards his latter end he was diffrefied fometimes with a pain, which his doctor thought might arife from a flone in his kidneys. Being once upon the recovery from an ill fit of that pain, he faid to one of his friends that afked him how he did, " he hoped, by the grace of " God, he fhould now be able to give one blow more " to the devil's kingdom;" and often profeffed, " he " did not defire to live a day longer than he might " do God fome fervice." He faid to another, when he perceived himfelf recovering, "Well, I thought I " had been putting into the harbour, but find I muft " to fea again."

He was fometimes fuddenly taken with fainting fits, which, when he recovered from, he would fay, " Dy-" ing is but a little more."

When he was in the fixty-third year of his age, which is commonly called the Grand Climacteric, and hath been to many the dying year, and was fo to his father, he numbered the days of it, from August 24. 1693, to August 24. 1694, when he finished it: and when he concluded it, he thus wrote in his diary: "This day finisheth my commonly dying year, which I have

The Life of Mr PHILIP HENRY.

"have numbered the days of; and fhould now apply "my heart more than ever to heavenly wifdom." He was much pleafed with that expression of our English liturgy in the office of burial, and frequently used it; "In the midst of life we are in death."

The infirmities of age, when they grew upon him, did very little abate his vigour and livelinefs in preaching, but he feemed even to renew his youth as the eagles; as those that are planted in the house of the Lord, who still bring forth fruit in old age; not fo much to flew that they are upright, as to flew that the Lord is upright, Pfal. xcii. 14, 15. But in his latter years, travelling was very troublefome to him ; and he would fay, as Mr Dod ufed to do, that when he thought to shake himself as at other times, he found his hair was cut; his fenfe of this led him to preach an occafional fermon not long before he died, on John xxi. 18. "When thou waft young, thou girdedft thy-" felf, " &c. Another occasional fermon he preached when he was old, for his own comfort, and the comfort of his aged friends, on Píal. 1xxi. 17, 18. " O God, " thou hast taught me from my youth," &c. He obferved there, that it is a bleffed thing to be taught of God from our youth; and those that have been taught of God from their youth, ought to declare his wondrous works all their days after. And those that have been taught of God from their youth, and have all their days declared his wondrous works, may comfortably expect, that when they are old he will not forfake them. Chrift is a mafter that doth not use to call off his old fervants.

For fome years before he died, he ufed to complain of an habitual wearinefs, contracted, he thought, by his ftanding to preach, fometimes very uneafily, and in inconvenient places, immediately after riding. He would fay, Every minifter was not cut out for an itinerant; and fometimes the manifest attention and affection of people in hearing, enlarged him both in length and fervency, fomewhat more than his ftrength could well bear. It was not many months before he died, that he wrote thus to a dear relation, who inquired folicitoufly concerning his health; "I am always habitually "weary, and expect no other till I lye down in the "bed of fpices." And (bleffed be God) fo the grave is to all the faints, fince He lay in it who is the rofe of Sharon, and the lily of the vallies. When fome of his friends perfuaded him to fpare himfelf, he would fay, "Its time enough to reft when I am in the grave; " what were candles made for, but to burn."

It doth not appear that he had any particular prefages of his death; but by many inflances there were of his actual gracious expectation of it, fomewhat more than ordinary for fome time before. The last visit he made to his children in Chefter, was in July 1695, almost a year before he died, when he spent a Lord's day there, and preached on the last verfe of the epiftle to Philemon, "The grace of our Lord Jefus Chrift be " with your fpirit." By grace he understood not fo much the good will of God towards us, as the good work of God in us, called the grace of Chrift, both because he is the author and finisher of it, and because he is the pattern and famplar of it. Now "the choi-" ceft gift we can afk of God for our friend is, that " this grace of our Lord Jefus Chrift may be with " their fpirit." This is the one thing needful, the better part, the root of the matter, the whole of man, the principle thing, the more excellent way, a bleffing indeed, and the thing that accompanies falvation. The grace of Chrift in the fpirit, enlightens and enlivens the fpirit, foftens and fubdues the fpirit, purifies and preferves the fpirit, greatens and guides the fpirit, fweetens and strengthens the spirit, and therefore what can be more defirable. A fpirit without the grace of Chrift. is a field without a fence, a fool without underflanding; it is a horfe without a bridle, and a houfe without furniture ; it is a fhip without tackle, and a foldier without armour; it is a cloud without rain, and a carcafe without a foul; it is a tree without fruit, and a traveller traveller without a guide. How earneft therefore thould we be in praying to God for grace, both for ourfelves and for our relations! He had intended to preach upon that text, when he was at Chefter the year before, but was then prevented, by a particular fad occafion, which obliged him to a funeral fermon, divine Providence referving that benediction (which his heart was much upon) for his valediction. The Thurfday following being kept as a faft in his fon's congregation at Chefter, he preached on Luke xix. 41. "He beheld the city, and wept over it;" which proved his farewell to the town, as the former was his farewell to his friends and relations in it.

It was not many weeks before he died, that he wrote thus to one of his children: "We are well here, thanks "be to God, and are glad to hear that you and yours "are well alfo, God in mercy continue it: but why "fhould webe well always? Do we deferve it? Arethere "no mixtures in our obedience? Are there any perfons "or families, at whofe door ficknefs and death never "knocked? Muft the earth be forfaken for us, or the "rock removed out of its place? Is it not enough that "we be dealt with according to the manner of men, "and that we have a promife, that it fhall end well, "everlaftingly well?"

To another of his children, about the fame time, he writes, "We are fenfible that we decline apace, but "the beft of it is, that as time goes, eternity comes; and we are in good hope, through grace, that it will "be a comfortable eternity."

It was in April 1696, a few weeks before he died, that his fon's father-in-law, Robert Warburton, Efq; was gathered to his grave in peace, in a good old age. Upon the tidings of whofe death, Mr Henry wrote thus to his fon; "Your fathers, where are they? your "father-in-law gone, and your own father going; but "you have a God-father that lives for ever." He was wont fometimes to fubfcribe his letters, your ever-loving, but not ever-living father.

It

It was not a month before he died, that, in a letter to his very dear and worthy friend and brother, Mr Tallents of Shrewsbury, he had this paffage: "Me-" thinks it is ftrange, that it fhould be your lot and " mine, to abide fo long on earth by the fluff, when " fo many of our friends are dividing the fpoil above, " but God will have it fo; and to be willing to live " in obedience to his holy will, is as true an act of " grace, as to be willing to die when he calls, efpeci-" ally when life is labour and forrow. But when it " is labour and joy, fervice to his name, and fome " meafure of fuccels and comfort in ferving him; when " it is to ftop a gap, and ftem a tide, it is to be rejoi-" ced in; 'tis heaven upon earth : nay, one would " think, by the Pfalmist's oft repeated plea, Pfal. vi. " xxx. lxxxviii. cxv. and cxviii. that it were better " than to be in heaven itfelf; and can that be ?"

A little before his ficknefs and death, being fummer time, he had feveral of his children, and his childrens children about him, at Broad Oak, with whom he was much refreshed, and very cheerful; but ever and anon spoke of the fashion he was in, as passing away; and often told them, he should be there but a while to bid them welcome. And he was observed frequently in prayer, to beg of God, that "he would make us ready "for that which would come certainly, and might "come suddenly." One asking him how de did, he answered, "I find the chips fly off apace, the tree will "be down shortly."

The laft time he administered the Lord's fupper, a fortnight before he died, he clofed the administration with that fcripture, 1 John iii. 2. "It doth not yet ap-" pear what we fhall be;" not yet, but it will fhortly. The Sabbath but one before he died, being, in the courfe of his exposition, come to that difficult part of fcripture, the xl. of Ezekiel, and the following chapters, he faid he would endeavour to explain those prophecies to them; and added "If I do not do it now, "I never shall :" and he observed, that the only prophetical phetical fermon which our Lord Jefus preached, was but a few days before he died. This many of his hearers not only reflected upon afterwards, but took notice of at that time with a concern, as having fomething in it more than ordinary.

On the Lord's-day, June 21. 1696, he went through the work of the day with his ufual vigour and livelinefs. He was then preaching over the first chapter of St Peter's fecond epiftle, and was that day on those words, "Add to your faith virtue," ver. 5. He took virtue for christian courage and resolution in the exercise of faith; and the last thing he mentioned, in which christians have need of courage, is in dying ; " for (as he was often us'd to fay) it is a ferious thing to die, and to die is a work by itfelf." That day he gave notice, both morning and afternoon, with much affection and enlargement, of the public faft, which was appointed by authority the Friday following, June, 26. preffing. his hearers, as he us'd to do upon fuch occasions, to come in a prepared frame, to the folemn fervices of that day.

The Tuesday following, June 23, he role at fix o'clock, according to his cuftom, after a better night's fleep than ordinary, and in wonted health. Between feven and eight o'clock he performed family worfhip, according to the ufual manner; he expounded very largely the former half of the civ. Pfalm, and fung it; but he was fomewhat fhorter in prayer than he us'd to be, being then (as it was thought) taken ill. Bleffed is that fervant, whom his Lord, when he comes, shall find fo doing. Immediately after prayer he retired to his chamber, not faying any thing of his illnefs, but was foon after found upon his bed in great extremity of pain, in his back, breaft, and bowels; it feemed to be a complicated fit of the ftone and cholick together, in very great extremity. The means that had been us'd to give him relief in his illnefs were altogether ineffectual; he had not the least intermission or remisfion of pain, neither up nor in bed, but in a continual tofs.

tofs. He had faid fometimes, that God's Ifrael may find Jordan rough; but there's no remedy, they must through it to Canaan; and would tell of a good man who us'd to fay, he was not fo much afraid of death as of dying. We know they are not the godly people, part of the description of whose condition it is, that there are no bands in their death, and yet their end is peace, and their death gain, and they have hope in it. In this extremity he was still looking up to God, and calling upon him, who is a prefent help in the needful hour. When the exquisiteness of his pain forced groans and complaints from him, he would prefently correct himfelf with a patient and quiet fubmiffion to the hand of his heavenly Father, and a cheerful acquiescence in his heavenly will. "I am ashamed (faith he) of these groans, I want virtue : O for virtue now when I have need of it (referring to his fubject the Lord's-day before) forgive me that I groan thus, and I will endeavour to filence them ; but indeed my ftroke is heavier than my groaning." It is true, what Mr Baxter faid in his pain, There's no diffuting against fense. It was his trouble, as it was Mr Baxter's that by reafon of his bodily pain, he could not express his inward comfort; however that was it, with which God gracioufly ftrengthened him in his foul. He faid to those about him, They must remember what instructions and counfels he had given them when he was in health, for now he could fay but little to them, only to refer them to what he had faid, as that which he would live and die by.

It was two or three hours after he was taken ill, before he would fuffer a meffenger to be fent to Chefter for his fon, and for the doctor, faying, he fhould either be better, or dead, before they could come; but at laft he faid, as the prophet did to his importunate friends, Send. About eight o'clock that evening they came, and found him in the fame extremity of pain which he had been in all day. And nature being before fpent with his conftant and indefatigable labours in the work of the Lord, now funk, and did perfectly fuccumb under its burthen, and was quite difabled to grapple with fo many hours inceffant pain. What further means were then us'd proved fruitlefs, and did not anfwer the intention. He apprehended himfelf going apace, and faid to his fon when he came in, " O fon, you are " welcome to a dying father : I am now ready to " offered, and the time of my departure is at har His pain continued very acute, but he had peace w in. I am tormented (faid he once) but bleffed be Gut not in this flame; and foon after, " I am all on fire," (when at the fame time his extreme parts were col.1) but he prefently added, Bleffed be God it is not the fire of hell. To fome of his next neighbours who came in to fee him (for those at a distance had not notice of his illnefs) he faid, " O make fure work for your fouls " by getting an interest in Christ while you are in " health; for if I had that work to do now, what would " become of me? but I blefs God I am fatisfied." It was a caution he was often wont to give; See to it, that your work be not undone, when your time is done, left you be undone for ever.

Towards ten or eleven o'clock that night, his pulfe and fight began to fail; of the latter he himfelf took notice, and inferred from it the near approach of his diffolution.

He took an affectionate farewell of his dear yoke-fellow, with a thoufand thanks for all her love and care, and tendernels; left a bleffing for all his dear children, and their dear yoke-fellows and little ones, that were abfent. He faid to his fon, who fat under his head, " Son, the Lord blefs you, and grant that " you may do worthily in your generation, and be " more ferviceable to the church of God than I have " been ;" fuch was his great humility to the laft. And when his fon, replied, O Sir, pray for me that I may but tread in your fteps ; he answered, Yea, follow peace and holinefs, and let them fay what they will. More he would have faid to bear his dying teltimony to the Ζ way in which he had walked, but nature was fpent, and he had not ftrength to express it.

His understanding and speech continued almost to the last breath, and he was still in his dving agonies calling upon God, and committing himfelf to him. One of the last words he faid, when he found himself just ready to depart, was, "O death, where is thy ----?" with that his fpeech faultered, and within a few minutes (after about fixteen hours illnefs) he quietly breathed out his precious foul, into the embraces of his dear Redeemer, whom he had trufted, and faithfully forved in the work of the ministry, about forty-three years. He departed betwixt twelve and one o'clock in the morning of June 24. midfummer-day, in the fixty-fifth year of his age. Happy, thrice happy he, to whom fuch a fudden change was no furprize, and who could triumph over death, as an unitung difarmed enemy. even when he made fo fierce an onfet. He had often fpoke of it as his defire, that if it were the will of God, he might not outlive his usefulness; and it pleafed God to grant him his defire, and give him a flort paffage from the pulpit to the kingdom; from the height of his ulefulnefs, to receive the recompence of reward. So was it ordered by Him in whofe hands our times are.

After the account we have given of his great ulefulnefs, it is eafy to imagine what forrow and mourning there was among his friends, when they heard that the Lord had taken away their mafter from their head. One that lived fo much defired, could not but die as much lamented. The furprife of the flroke put people into a perfect aftonifhment; and many faid. The Lord removed him fo fuddenly, becaufe he would not deny the many prayers that would have been put up for his recovery, had it leen known that he was in peril. One thing that aggravated this fevere difpenfation, and made it in the apprehenfion of many look the more difmal, was, that this powerful interceffor was taken away just before a fast-day, when he would have been wreftling wreftling mightily with God for mercy for the land. However, it proved a fast-day indeed, and a day of humiliation to that congregation, to whom an empty pulpit was an awakening fermon. The Broad-Oak was then like that under which Rebekah's nurfe was buried, Gen. xxxv. 8. Allon bacuth, the oak of weeping. They who had many a time fitten with dry eyes, under melting ordinances, could not fit fo under fuch a melting providence, by which the Lord God called fo loudly to weeping and to mourning, and to girding with fackcloth. But becaufe Mr Henry had been wont, to give it for a rule, that weeping must not hinder fowing, a mite was caft into the treafury of the nation's prayers, and a word fpoken to bring the work of the day, and the event of the day together, from 2 Kings xiii. 20.

The day following being Saturday, June 27. the earthen veffel, in which this treafure had been lodged, was laid up in the grave in Whitchurch church, attended thither with a very great company of true mourners, all the country round; many from Chefter and Shrewfbury, and the towns about, came to do him honour at his death : and, befides the floods of tears that were fhed, there were abundance of teftimonies given to him, by perfons of all forts, like that to Jehoiadah, 2 Chron. xxiv. 16. That he was one that had done good in Ifrael. And there were those who faid, he was a man that no body did or could fpeak evil of, except for his nonconformity. He was used to fay to his relations, When I am dead, make little ado about me; a few will ferve to bring me to my grave. But his mind could not be obferved in that; 'twas impoffible fuch a burning and flining light could be extinguifhed, but there must be a universal notice taken of it. . Multitudes came unfought; not to fill their eyes (as Mr Vines expressed it) but to empty them; nor was there any other noife there, but that of general lamentation.

That morning before the removal of the corple, a  $Z_{2}$  moft most affectionate fermon was preached in Mr Henry's meeting-place, by his dear and worthy friend Mr Tallents of Shrewfbury, who was eleven years older than he, and through God's goodnefs still furvives him. He was willing to take that opportunity, to teffify the great love and honour that he had for Mr Henry, whom he called a friend that is nearer than a brother. His text was, Rom. viii. 23. " And not only they, but " ourfelves alfo, which have the first fruits of the Spi-" rit, even we ourfelves groan within ourfelves, wait-" ing for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our " body." In his application he fhewed excellently, and with much affection, how "the confideration of the " fpirit and life of this eminent fervant of God, would " greatly lead us to believe on Chrift, and to have the " fpirit of Chrift and live after it; and to fuffer with " Chrift, and to groan for our adoption." Several things were hinted concerning him, which have been mentioned already in this narrative, and a very honourable teftimony born to him. From a long acquaintance with him, he witnefied concerning him, to those who knew his record to be true, that " he was hum-" ble and meek, kind and peaceable, wife and chari-" table, and one in whom the fruits of the Spirit were " eminently : that he was a friend and a counfellor, " and a father to many; that his expounding and " preaching was plain and pleafant, warm and favory, " full. and fuch as few could reach, and greatly bleffed " by God ; and that in it he laboured more abundant-" ly than any." And after a great encomium of him, it was excellently observed, and must be mentioned here, as that which was highly agreeable to Mr Henry's fpirit, and his expressions upon all occasions : " That " it was not his own rightcoufnefs that faved him, nor " his own firength that quickened and upheld him, but " Chrift's righteoufnefs and Chrift's ftrength; for to " him to live was Chrift : and in all his difcourfes, fer-" mors, and letters, he was very careful to afcribe the " honour of all to Chrift, and to make Chrift his all " in di

"in all." He concluded with fome words of feafonable advice to those of that fociety and neighbourhood:

1. "Give thanks to God that ever you had him or " faw him, and that you had him fo long, above thir-" ty years in this place. Do not many of you owe " even your very fouls to him under God? while you " mourn, give thanks to God that you ever knew " him; old and great mercies must be thankfully re-" membered.

2. " Rejoice in the glory that he now enjoys: " weep " not for him, but weep for yourfelves:" 'twas the " text on which he preached, not much above a year " ago, at the funeral of that intelligent, holy, uleful " man, Mr William Lawrence of Wem. The primitive chriftians buried their faints with hymns and 64 " pfalms of joy. Chryfoftom on the Hebrews faith, "We are to glorify God, and give thanks to him, that " he hath crowned the deceafed, and freed them from " their labours; and chides those that mourned and " howled. And the days of their death were called " Natalitia martyrum & fanctorum, the birth days of " the faints and martyrs. And Hierom (in his epitaph " on holy Paula, and in the lives of other holy per-" fons, writ by him) faith, that at her funeral no " fhrieks were heard, but multitudes of pfalms and " hymns were fung in divers languages.

3. "Bewail the lofs, the general lofs, and yours in " particular, yet fo as to have hope in God. I need " not tell you how great your lofs is, you feel it more " than I am able to express. If any rejoice that he is " gone, becaufe he tormented them, fay as the church " Micah vii. 8, 9.

4. "Seek out for a fupply; do not mourn and fit " ftill, but up and be doing in your places; you have " had a cheap gospel hitherto : God fent you one that " could preach freely, and which is more, that would " do fo too; one that fought not yours, but you; and " now God will fee what you will do for yourfelves; " that now the shepherd is smitten, the sheep may not be de :

" be fcattered. Pray to God to raife up others like " him, and gracioufly to give you one.

5. "Take heed of liking no preacher, now he is gone. This is a ufual fault among many that have "had excellent preachers, no body can pleafe them. "But God may blefs weaker means, and make your "fouls live and thrive under them.

6. "Hold faft that which you have; it is the advice " given to Philadelphia, the beft of the Churches, " Rev. iii. 11. Keep that good thing which is commit-" ted to you, that favorinels of heart, that love to Chrift " and to faints, to all faints, that knowledge of the " truth. Keep to his fober principles. Remember " his dying counfel, Follow peace and holinefs : have " thefe things always in remembrance. Take heed " of falling off, take heed of falling away; the world " will draw you, and Satan will tempt you, and your " own bufy hearts will be apt to betray you; but go " on humbly and honeftly in the ftrength of Chrift, " and fear not: be not like those Jews that turned a-" fide when John Baptift was dead, John v. 35. The " Lord keep you from being fuch, and give you to go " on to his heavenly kingdom."

It would have fwelled this book too much, if we inferted the fermon at large, and therefore we forbear it.

The next day being Lord's day, Mr Owen of Ofweftry preached a moft excellent fermion in the morning, agreeable to that fad occafion, upon that pathetical farewell which Elifha gave to Elijah, 2 Kings ii. 12. " My father, my father, the chariots of Ifrael and the " horfemen thereof, and he faw him no more; and he " took hold of his own clothes, and rent them." He obferved, 1. "That faithful minifters are the fathers of " a people, and their chariots and horfemen; the for-" mer a metaphor taken from a family, a peaceable " fociety; the latter from an army, a warlike body. " Fathers to provide good things, chariots and horfe-" men to protect from evil things. 2. There is a time " when

, lile

" when we shall fee these fathers, these chariots and " horfemen of Ifrael no more. Their time is appointed, their work cut out for them, and when those 66 are finished they are removed 3. When God takes 66 away our fathers, the chariots of our Ifrael, and the 55 " horfemen thereof, it is a proper feafon for mourn-" ing and lamentation. Under this he did most af-" fectionately excite us, 1. To be fenfible of our lofs. " which is better felt than express. 'Tis the loss of " one that was a father; a father to his family, to " whom he was conftant in unfolding the holy ora-" cles; a father to the prophets, for counfel, and con-" duct, and example : the fons of the prophets never " converfed with him, but they were, or might have " been the better for him; a father to his congrega-tion, now left orphans: 'tis the lofs of one of the " chariots and horfemen of our Ifrael, fo eminent was " he for prevalency in prayer, courage in duty, con-" duct in affairs, conftancy in religion, and a firm ad-" herence to his ministerial vows; and, laftly, a con-" tempt of the world, in which as he that warreth, he " did not entangle himfelf. 2. To be fenfible of those " fins, which have provoked God to deprive us of " him. Barrennefs and unfruitfulnefs under his min-" iftry; 'tis for this that God hath a controverfy with 66 us. 3. To blefs God that we enjoyed him fo long: eaten bread must not be forgotten. 4. To be fol-66 " lowers of him, as he was of Chrift. He was a pat-" tern for ministers, excelling in the knowledge of the " feriptures, which made this man of God perfect, and " industrious to advance the honour of Jefus Chrift, 66 whom he made the Alpha and Omega of his reli-" gion; not addicted to controverfies, but walking in " the good old way, unwearied in the work of God. " It was the delight of his heart, to be laying out him-" felf for the good of fouls. Exemplary for humility " and low thoughts of himfelf, and his own perform-" ances, for meeknefs and readinefs to forgive injuries, " for candor in fpeaking of others, and their words " and

" and actions, on which he ever put the beft conftruc-" tion, and was never apt to fpeak evil of any man. " Eminent for family religion, and in that an excel-" lent copy to all mafters of families. Those things " therefore which you have heard and feen in him do, " and the God of peace shall be with you." These were the heads which were copiously and excellently enlarged upon in that fermon.

In the afternoon of that Sabbath, another fermon was preached by a near relation of Mr Henry's on Heb. xi. 4. " And by it, he being dead yet fpeak-" eth."

The Wednefday following, July 1. being the lecture in courfe at Danford in Whitchurch parifh, Mr Samuel Lawrence of Nantwich, whole turn it was to preach that lecture, brought up the long train of mourners, (as he expressed it) in a most favoury and pertinent difcourfe on Heb. xiii. 7. " Remember them which have " (or have had) the rule over you, who have fpoken " unto you the word of God, whole faith follow, con-" fidering the end of their conversation." " Bishops " no doubt, (faith he) are here meant, fcripture pri-" mitive bilhops, the paftors of particular congrega-" tions, for they were fuch as had fpoken to them the " word of God, and watched for their fouls, ver. 17. " Such a one Mr Henry was, that great man, who is " fallen this day in Ifrael, removed from us, but hath " left behind him a good name to be remembered, a " good example to be imitated; many a good word " fpoken to us, and many a good prayer put up for " us. Remember him with thankfulnefs, that God " has given fuch power, fuch gifts and graces unto " men. I never knew a man (faid he) in all my ac-" quaintance, in whom I have feen fo much of God " as in good Mr Henry, whofe holy, humble, heaven-" ly, gracious conversation, hath been to me no fmall " confirmation of the truth of the christian religion; " that God gave him to you, and continued him fo " long, to fee the church in a better flate than he had " fome-

" fometimes feen it; that God crowned his labours with fuch great fuccefs. Many fouls in heaven, and 66 " fome on earth blefling God that ever they faw his 66 face, and that God continued him in his ufefulnefs 66 to the laft. Remember him with a quiet fubmiffion 66 to the hand of God in his removal from us. Senfi-٤6 ble we must be of the stroke; 'tis a public los, a 66 lofs to the ministry, our hands are this day weak; 66 a lofs to the nation, for which he was a powerful " interceffor; a lofs to this country, in which he was 66 a burning and fhining light; but yet we must ac-" quiesce in the divine will. The treasure was in an " earthen veffel, and God will bring us to depend " more upon himfelf; and he is teaching us to live, " and live to Chrift without good Mr Henry, though " we have fometimes faid, we did not know how we " could live without him. Remember him to pay all " honour and refpect to his name and memory; rife " up and call him bleffed. That's a foul tongue, as " well as a lying one, that can fay any thing of him 66 unbecoming a difciple, fervant, and minister of Jefus " Chrift. Remember him, to imitate his good exam-66 ple. Many of vou will be called Mr Henry's folςς lowers; be fo indeed. He was a pattern to minif-" ters of diligence, zeal, humility, and great meeknefs in dealing with all people, which contributed abun-66 dantly to his fuccefs; his preaching affectionate, 66 without affectation. To all people he was a pattern 66 of faith and charity, and contempt of the world, of 66 zeal and moderation, patience in fuffering, and of 66 conftancy and perfeverance to the end. Remem-" ber him, and remember your fins which have pro-66 voked God to take him away. Have not we griev-" ed this good man's fpirit? &c. " the worfe of this world, which is much impoverith-" ed, and the better of heaven, which is formewhat en-" riched by the removal of this good man."

Thus we have gleaned a little out of the fermons, which very well deferved to have been published at large, fome of the testimonies that were borne to him, by fuch as had had long and intimate acquaintance with him, that knew his excellencies very much, and knew as little to give flattering titles; nor was it any invidious piece of fervice, to speak thus honourably of one, who. like Demetrius, had a good report of all men, and of the truth itfelf.

Nor was it there only, but from abroad, that very honourable testimonies were given of him. Sir Henry Ashurft (whofe great worth and usefulness the world hath been made to know, by fome of the best pens of the age) befides the perfonal acquaintance he had with Mr Henry, both at Boreatton and in London, had kept up a conftant correspondence with him, by letter, for many years. Read the character he gave of him, in a letter to a near relation of Mr Henry's, upon the tidings of his death :--- " I need not tell you how fadly I " received the doleful news of Mr Henry's translation, " who, I do think, lived the greateft example of fin-" cere godlinefs, with prudence and fweetnefs of tem-" per, of any I ever knew." And in another letter, not only proposing, but prefing the publication of an account of his life, he professeth, he thought there was none like him in his day, at least of his acquaintance, which is known to be both of the largest and of the beft : " And (faith he) if Sir Fulk Grevil would have " it inferibed upon his tombstone, that he was a friend " to Sir Philip Sidnèv, I may well be pleafed to have " it told to the world, that I loved and honoured blef-" fed Mr Henry; a man of fo much prudence, and " withal fo much fincerity, of fo good a temper, fo " much a gentleman, and yet of fuch ftrict piety and " devotedness to God, that I force ever knew his " fellow."

The reverend Mr William Turner, now vicar of Walburton in Suffex, (of whom mention was up to before) lately fent to me a very kind letter, ex mer and tu, with his free confent to have it inferted in the suffective count; fome hints whereof I think fit to fubjects

Worthy Sir,

I doubt for not but you will meet with fome, that will give fuch a hiftory but a cold reception. All that part of the world that lies in darknefs, will be offended, when beams of clear light and fun-fhine first dart into their faces. Virtutem prafentem odimus.

Another worthy conformift, of his acquaintance, having occafion to mention him in a letter to a friend, calls him "The great, good, now glorious Mr Henry, " whofe memory (faith he) thall ever be precious, and " even facred to me."

Such

Such as these were the honourable testimonies which all that knew him, and knew how to value true excellency, attended him with. It is part of the recompence of charity and moderation in this world, that it obtains a good report of all men. The kingdom of God (faith the bleffed apostle, Rom. xiv. 17. 18.) is not meat and drink, which were then the matters of doubtful dilputation, "but righteoufnefs, and peace, and joy in the "Holy Ghoft; and he that in thefe things ferveth " Chrift, is not only acceptable to God, but approved " of men;" as, on the contrary, they that judge will be judged, and with what measure we mete, it will be meafured to us again. And this is the excellency of a good name, that it is out of the reach of death, and is not buried in the grave, but rather grows up from the grave.

It is not for nothing Solomon hath joined this good name, which is better than precious ointment, with the day of one's death, which upon that account is better than the day of one's birth, that it compleats the character of thefe that finish their courfe well, and are faithful unto death; whereas a great name, like the names of the great ones of the earth, is often withered and blemissed by death. We read of those that " bear " their shame when they go down to the pit, though " they were the terror of the mighty in the land of " the living." Ezek. xxxii. 35.

At a meeting of the diffenting minifters of Chefhire at Knutsford in May 1696, (a few weeks before Mr Henry died) it was agreed, that their next meeting should be at Chefter (though inconvenient to many of them) upon condition that he would meet them there, and give them a fermon. It was with much difficulty that he was prevailed with to promife it, but his Mafter called for him before the time appointed came. Mr Flavel of Devonfhire died when he was under a like appointment. But happy they that are come to the "General affembly, and church of the first-born, and " to the fpirirs of juft men made perfect."

The Life of Mr PHILIP HENRY.

As to his bodily prefence, he was of a middle flature, his complexion not approaching to any extream, of a very pleafant afpect, and an unufual mixture of gravity and fweetnefs in the air of his countenance, which was the true index of his mind. When fome of his friends have folicited him to have his picture drawn, he would put them off with this, that " the " beft picture of a minister is in the hearts of his peo-" ple."

CHAP. X.

A miscellaneous collection of some of bis sayings, observations, counsels and comforts, out of bis sermons, letters and discourses.

MR Henry, through the excess of his modesty and felf-diffidence, never published any of his labours to the world, nor ever fitted or prepared any of them for the prefs; and yet none more valued the labours of others, or rejoiced more in them; nor have I heard any complain lefs of the multitude of good books, concerning which he often faid, that ftore is no fore, and he was very forward to perfuade others to publish; and always expressed a particular pleasure in reading the lives, actions, and fayings of eminent men, ancient and modern, which he thought the most ufeful and inftructive kind of writings. He was alfo a very candid reader of books, not apt to pick quarrels with what he read, efpecially when the defign appeared to be honest, and when others would find fault, and fay, this was wanting, and t'other amifs, his ufual excuse was, "there is nothing perfect under the "fun."

It will be but a fmall repair of this want of the publifhing of fome of his works (but I doubt it will prove the beft we can make,) to glean up fome few of many of his fayings, obfervations, and good inftructions (as his his remains) which we fhall not marfhal in any order, but give them as they occur, befides those which have been already inferted into this narrative.

'Twas a faying he frequently ufed, which hath been mentioned already, that "Every creature is that to us, " and only that, which God makes it to be :" and another was, " Duty is ours, events are God's :" and another was " The foul is the man," and therefore " That " is always beft for us, which is beft for our fouls :" and another was, " The devil cozens us of all our time, " by cozening us of the prefent time."

In his thankfgivings for temporal mercies, he often faid, "If the end of one mercy were not the beginning "of another, we were undone :" and to encourage to the work of thankfgiving he would fay, that "new "mercies call for new returns of praife, and then thofe "new returns will fetch in new mercies;" and from Pfal. l. 23. "He that offers praife glorifies me, and to "him that orders his converfation aright—." He obferved, that thankfgiving is good, but thanks-living is better.

When he spoke of a good name, he usually described it to be a name for good things with good people. When he fpoke of contentment, he used to fay, "When " the mind and the condition meet, there's content-" ment. Now in order to that, either the condition " must be brought up to the mind, and that is not " only unreafonable but impoffible; for as the condi-" tion rifeth, the mind rifeth with it; or elfe the mind " must be brought down to the condition, and that is " both poffible and reafonable. And he obferved, " that no condition of life will of itfelf make a man " content, without the grace of God; for we find " Haman difcontented in the court, Ahab difcontent-" ed on the throne, Adam difcontented in Paradife, " nay (and higher we cannot go) the angels that fell " discontented in heaven itself."

The three questions which he advised people to put to themselves in felf-examination before the facrament, were,

192 The Life of Mr PHILIP HENRY.

were, What am I? What have I done? and What do I want?

He used to recommend to his friends these four foripture arguments against fin, expressed for memory's fake in four verses, to be ready in an hour of temptation.

> Is this thy kindnefs to thy friend? It will be bitternefs in the end. The vows of God upon me lye; Should fuch a man as I am fly?

He faid there were four things which he would nor for all the world have against him, The word of God, his own conficience, the prayers of the poor, and the account of godly ministers.

"He that hath a blind conficience which fees nothing, a dead conficience which feels nothing, and a dumb conficience which faith nothing, is in as miferable a condition as a man can be in on this fide hell."

Preaching on I Pet. i. 6. "If need be, you are in "heavinefs----." He fhewed what need the people of God have of afflictions. "The fame that our bodies "have of phyfick, that our trees have of pruning, that gold and filver have of the furnace, that liquors have "of being emptied from veffel to veffel, that the iron hath of a file, that the fields have of a hedge, that the "child has of the rod."

Preaching on that prayer of Chrift for his difciples, John xvii. 21. "That they all may be one," which no doubt is an anfwered prayer, for the Father heard him always, he fhewed, "That notwithftanding the many "fad divisions that are in the church, yet all the faints, "as far as they are fanctified, are one; one in relation, one flock, one family, one building, one body, one bread : one by reprefentation, one in image and likenefs, of one inclination and difpolition : one in their aims, one in their afkings, one in amity and friendfhip, one in intereft, and one in their inheritance; " ance; nay, they are one in judgement and opinion; " though in fome things they differ, yet those things " in which they are agreed are many more, and much " more confiderable than those things wherein they " differ. They are all of a mind concerning fin, that " it is the worlt thing in the world; concerning Chrift " that he is all in all; concerning the favour of God, " that it is better than life; concerning the world, that " it is vanity; concerning the worl of God, that it is " very precious," &e.

Preaching on Gal. i. 16. concerning the conversion of Paul, he began his fermon with this remark, to raife attention: much is faid in flory concerning the feven wonders of the world, the Temple of Ephefus, the Pyramids of Egypt, the Fomb of Maufoleus, &c. all which are now no more; but I have been fometimes thinking, whether I could not name feven things which I would call the feven wonders of the church; and what do you think of thefe feven? are they not wonderful? I. Our redemption by Jefus Chrift, who is called Wonderful; 2. The falvation of Noah in the Ark; 3. The faith of Abraham in offering up Ifaac; 4. The patience of Job; 5. The providences of God towards the Nation and people of the Jews; 6. The pouring out of the Spirit upon the Apoftles; 7. The conversion of Paul.

But it would be endlets to gather up fuch paffages as thefe out of his fermons, which were full of them, and we mention thefe only becaufe they occur first.

He used to observe concerning the nation of the Jews, that before the captivity in Babylon, no people could be more firongly addicted to idols and idolatry than they were, to admiration, confidering what clear warnings they had against it. But after that captivity, never was any people more averse to idols and idolatry than they, that the promise might be fulfilled, Ephraim shall fay, What have I to do any more with idols? and he looked upon it, that the idolatry of the papifts was one of the greatest obstructions to the Jews converfion, which he did expect and look for, as not appre-B b hending hending how the promifes, Rom. xi. have yet had their full accomplifhment; not that they fhall again be incorporated into a people, but fhall join themfelves to the churches of Chrift, in the feveral nations whither they be feattered.

The great thing that he condemned and witheffed againft in the church of Rome, was their monopolizing of the church, and condemning all that are not in with their interefts, which is fo directly contrary to the fpirit of the gofpel, as nothing can be more. He fometimes faid, "I am too much a catholick, to be a Roman catholick."

He often express himself well pleased with that healing rule, which, if duly observed, would put an end to all our divisions: Sit in necessarily unitas, in non necesfarus libertas, in ommibus charitas. Let there be in neceffary things unity, in every thing charity, and then there need not be in every punctilio uniformity.

By the inflitutions of the gofpel (he faid) he knew of no holy place, one holy day, two holy facraments, and four holy canons. Let all things be done in charity: let all things be done to cdifying: let all things be done decently and in order: and let all things be done to the glory of God.

When his opinion was afked about any doubtful matter, as playing at cards. the marriage of coufin-germans, or the like, he was very cautious in determining fu h things to be finful; but he would fay, It's good keeping on the fafer fide; and a man would not chufe to go upon a precipice, when he might go upon even ground: Prov. x. 5. "He that walks uprightly, walks "furely," in oppofition to walking at all adventures. In the obfervations he made of God's Providences, he frequently took notice in difcourfe with his friends, of the fulfilling of the fcripture in them; for (faith he) the fcripture hath many accomplifhments, and is in the fulfilling every day. Speaking of a wicked fon in the neighbourhood that was very undutiful to his mother, he charged forme of his children to obferve the providence of God concerning him; perhaps (faith he) I may not live to fee it, but do you take notice, whether God do not come upon him with fome remarkable judgement in this life, according to the threatening implied in the reafon annexed to the fifth commandment: but he himfelf lived to lee it fulfilled not long after, in a very fignal providence.

He observed from scripture instances, as well as from fome providences which he had taken notice of in his own day, That if any began well in the ways of religion and godlinefs, and afterwards caft off their profession, and returned to profaneness again, usually God fets a mark of his difpleafure upon them, by fome vifible judgement in this world; their eftates ruined, their reputation blafted, their families funk, or themfelves brought to mifery; fo that all who paffed by might fay, This was an apoltate. "If any man draw back, my " foul fhall have no pleafure in him."

He observed from Numb. x. 12. "That all our re-" moves in this world, are but from one wildernefs to " another." Upon any change that is before us, we are apt to promife ourfelves a Canaan, but we fhall be deceived, it will prove a wildernefs.

Once prefling the fludy of the fcriptures, he advifed to take a verfe of Pfalm cxix. every morning to meditate upon, and fo go over the pfalm twice in the year, and that (faid he) will bring you to be in love with all the reft of the fcripture ; and he often faid, "All grace " grows, as love to the word of God grows."

One afking his advice, what to do when (as often unavoidably) we are in the fight and hearing of the wickedness of the wicked, and whether we are to reprove them; why (faith he) you know what an angry countenance doth, and we may fometimes give a reproof by our looks, when we have not opportunity of giving it otherwife.

He would not bear that any fhould be evil fpoken of in his hearing, 'twas to him as vinegar to the teeth. He would mind those who reflected upon people behind their backs, of that law, Lev. xix. 14. "Thou "fhalt not curfe the deaf." Thofe that are abfent are deaf, they cannot right themfelves, and therefore fay no ill of them. A friend of his inquiring of him concerning a matter which tended to reflect upon fome people; he began to give him an account of the ftory, but immediately broke off, and checked himfelf with thefe words, "But our rule is, to fpeak evil of no man," and would proceed no further in the ftory. 'Twas but the week before he died, that one defired him to lend him fuch a book; "Truly (faith he) I " would lend it you, but that it rakes in the faults of "fome, which fhould rather be covered with a man-" the of love." 'Twere eafy to multiply inflances of this.

196 The Life of Mr Phillip Henry.

To quicken people to diligence and livelines in the worship of God, he would fometimes observe, that the temple was built upon a threshing-floor, a place of labour. He would also urge, that in answer to these who turned it to his reproach, that his meeting-place had been a barn; no new thing (would he fay) to turn a threshing-floor into a temple.

When fome zealous people in the country would have him to preach against top-knots, and other vanities in apparel, he would fay, that was none of his bufinefs; if he could but perfuade people to Chrift, the pride and vanity, and excess of those things would fall of courfe; and yet he had a diflike to vanity and gaiety of drefs, and allowed it not in those that he had influence upon. His rule was, that in fuch things we must neither be owls nor apes; not affect fingularity, nor affect modifinefs; nor (as he used to observe from 1 Pet. iii. 3.) make the putting on of apparel our adorning, becaufe chriftians have better things to adorn themfelves with. When fome complained to him of a relation of theirs, that would not let them drefs his children with ribbands, and other fine things, "why truly " (faid Mr Henry) those things are fit for children;" thereby reproving both him that would not allow them to his children, and them that perhaps minded them too much themfelves.

He often, both in fermons and difcourfes, would prefs people to fix to themfelves fome good principles, and to come off from the corrupt and carnal principles that worldly people go by. He took all occasions to recommend fuch principles as thefe: "That God who is " the first and best, should have the first and best; " that a part in Chrift is a good part; that foul prof-" perity is the best prosperity, and that it is well " or ill with us, according as it is well or ill with " our fouls; that honefy is the best policy; that " those that would have the comfort of relations, must " be careful to do the duty of them; that all is well " that ends everlastingly well; that time and the things " of time, are nothing compared with eternity and " the things of eternity; that it is better to fuffer the " greatest affliction than to commit the least fin; that " it highly concerns us to do that now, which we shall " most wish we had done when we come to die; that "work for God is its own wages; that it is folly for " a man to do that which he must certainly undo a-" gain by repentance, or be undone to all eternity." Such as thefe were the principles he would have chriftians to govern themfelves by.

Speaking of the caufes of atheilm, he had this obfervation; "That a head full of vain and unprofitable, "notions, meeting with a heart full of pride and felf-"conceitednefs, difpofe a man directly to be an atheift."

A gentlewoman, that upon fome unkindnefs betwixt her and her hufband, was parted from him, and lived feparately near a twelve-month, grew melancholy, and complained of fin, and the withdrawing of the light of God's countenance, and the want of aflurance; he told her fhe must rectify what was amifs between her and her hufband, and return into the way of duty, elfe 'twas in vain to expect peace. Her friends were against it; but he faid, he was confident it would prove fo. 198 The Life of Mr PHILIP HENRY.

He faid he had observed concerning himself, that he was fometimes the worfe for eating, but never for abflinence; fometimes the worfe for wearing too few cloathes, but never for wearing too many; fometimes the worfe for speaking, but never for keeping filence.

As to his letters, he was very free in writing to his friends. A good leiter, he would fay, may perhaps do more good than a good fermon, becaufe the address is more particular, and that which is written remains. His language and expressions in his letters were always pious and heavenly, and feafoned with the falt of grace; and when there was occafion, he would excellently administer counfels, reproofs, or comforts by letter. He kept no copies of his letters, and it is impoflible if we fhould attempt it, to retrieve them from the hands into which they were feattered. Mr Kutherford's and Mr Allen's letters, that (like fome of the moft excellent of Paul's epiftles) bore date out of a prifon, have a mighty tincture of their peculiar prifon comforts and enlargements; we have none fuch to produce of Mr Henry's, no paftoral letters or prifon letters; he was himfelf, in his whole converfation, an epifle of Chrift: But we shall only glean up fome passages out of such of his letters as are in our hands, which may be affecting and edifying.

To his fon, when he was abroad for improvement at London, in the year 1685, and 686, with the common bufine's of his letters, which was always written with a favor of religion, he would intermix fuch lines as thefe: "We are all well here, thanks be to God, "the divine providence watching about our taber-"nacle, and compafiing us about with favour, as with a fhield. Our great inquiry is, What fhall we render ? alas ! our renderings are nothing to our receivfings; we are like the barren field, on which much coff is bellowed, but the crop is not accordingly. Our heavenly Father is loading us with his benefits, and we are loading him with our fins; grieving him that comforts us; and how long fhall it be fo? O "that " that it might be otherwife! that our mercies might "be as oil to the wheels, to make us fo much the "more active and lively in our Malter's work, effecially confidering how it is with our fellow fervants; "they empty and we fill, they Marah and we Naomi. "There may a day come, when it may coft dear to be honeft, but after all, to fear God and keep his commandments, is the whole of man. I therefore commend it to you, and you to God, who is a fhield and buckler to them that fear him.

"We are well, but in daily expectation of that " which we are born, and born again to, and that is " trouble in this world, yet rejeicing in hope of the 46 glory of God, which we are reaching after, and 66 prefling towards, as we truft you are alfo. Where 60 you are, you fee more of the glittering vanities of 66 this world in a day, than we here do in an age; and 66 are you more and more in love with them, or dead 66 and dying to them? I hope dead and dying to them, " for they are poor things, and perifh in the using : " make many worfe that enjoy them, but none better. " What is translated Vexation of spirit, Eccl. i. 2. may " be read, Feeding upon wind, Hof. mi. 1. and " can wind fatisfy? the Lord preferve and keep you " from all evil, the Lord preferve and keep your foul. ". We both fend you our love, and blefs you together, " and apart, every day, in the name of the Lord. A-*6 men and Amen.

"Be fincere, and humble, and choice in your company, always either getting good or doing good, gathering in or laying out. Remember to keep the heart with all diligence and above all keepings, for there the fountain is, and if that be well kept and clean, the ftreams will be accordingly.

" "Tis fome fhort refreshment to friends and rela-"tions, to fee and hear from one another, but it paf-"feth away, and we have here no continuing city, no "abiding delights in this world; our rest remains elfe-"where; those we have, lose much of their fweetness. "from " from the thoughts of parting with them while we "enjoy them, but the happinefs to come is eternal. " After millions of millions of ages (if we may fo fpeak " of eternity) as far from an end as the first moment; " and the last of glory will be glory (fo fome read " Prov. xxv. 27. keep that in your eye (my dear child) " and it will as much as any thing dazzle your eyes, " to all the fading deceiving vanities of this lower " world; and will be a quickening motive to you, to " abound always in the work of the Lord, forafmuch " as you know your labour shall not be in vain in the " Lord. The Lord blefs you, who bleffeth indeed.

"See that you walk circumfpectly, not as the fools, "but as the wife; many eyes are upon you, his effecially, who is all eye; Cave, Deus videt. Memento "boe agere; our bleffing with 1 Chron. xxviii. 9.

" The fame which is yet the prologue of yours, is " of ours alfo. Omma bene, laus Deo! but he that " girdeth on the harnafs, must not boast as he that " puts it off. While the world we live in is under " the moon, conftant in nothing but inconftancy; and " fuch changes are made in other families, why fhould " we alone promife ourfelves immunity from the com-" mon lot? there would be no need of faith and pa-" tience, which are Winter graces, if it fhould be al-" ways Summer time with us. We have three un-" changeables to oppofe to all other mutabilities; an " uncheangeable covenant, an unchangeable God, and " an unchangeable heaven: and while thefe three remain the fame, yesterday, to day, and for ever; wel-66 come the will of our heavenly Father in all events 66 that may happen to us: come what will, nothing can 66 66 come amifs to us.

Keep the invifible things of the other world always in your eye. He that ventures the lofs of an eternal crown and kingdom, for a cup or two of puddle water (fuch as all terrene pleafures in comparifon are) makes a bargain, which no lefs a fpace than that which is everlafting will be fufficient to bewail

bewail and repent of. How much better is it to lay up in flore now a good foundation for time to come, and to lay hold on eternal life? doing those works which we would be willing flould hereafter follow us, yet fliil making the bleffed Jefus our all in all.

"The further progrefs you make in your fludies, you will find them the eafier; 'tis fo with religion, the worft is at firft. It is like the picture that frowned at firft entrance, but afterwards finiles and looks pleafant. They that walk in finful ways, meet with fome difficulties at firft, which cuftom conquers, and they become as nothing. 'Tis good accuftoming ourfelves to that which is good. The more we do, the more we may do in religion. Your acquaintance (I doubt not) increafeth abroad, and accordingly your watch muft be; for by that oftentimes, ere we are aware, we are enfnared. He that walketh with wife men fhall be wife.

" The return of the Spring invites our thankfgiving " for the mercy of it. The birds are finging early and late, according to their capacity, the praifes of 66 " their Creator; but man only, that hath most cause, " finds fomething elfe to do. 'Tis redeeming love " that is the most admirable love; lefs than an eter-" nity will not fuffice to adore it in. Lord, how is it! " Lord, what is man! as the freams lead to the foun-" tain, fo fhould all our mercies lead us to that. We " both of us fend you our most affectionate love and " bleffing : bleffing ? that is, we pray and befeech the " most bieffed God, even our own God, to give you " his bleffing, for he only can command the bleffing; " and those whom he bleffeth are bleffed indeed. Let " us fill hear to our comfort, that you walk in the " truth, living above the things of the world, as " dead to them. The Lord in mercy fit us for his " will in the next providence, public and perfonal, for " time is always teening.

" Your improvement is our joy. Be fincere and feri-

Çc

"ous, cloathed with humility, abounding always in "the work of the Lord; and when you have done all, faying I am an unprofitable fervant. "Twas the good advice of the moral philofopher, In your con-"verfe with men, diftruft; but I muft add, In every "thing towards God, believe. Expect temptation and a fnare at every turn, and walk accordingly. We have a good caufe, a vanquifhed enemy, a good fecond, and extraordinary pay; for he that overcomes needs not defire to be more happy than the fecond and third of the revelation fpeaks him to be. The God of all mercy and grace compafs you about al-"ways with his favour as with a fnield !

" I would have you redeem time, for hearing the word in feafon, and out of feafon; your other ftudies will profper never the worfe, efpecially if you could return immediately from it to the clofet again, with cooling divertifements by the way.

" See your need of Chrift more and more, and live " upon him; no life like it, fo fweet, fo fafe. Chriftus " meus mibi in omnta. Immediately after his fon was ordained to the work of the miniftry at London, in the year 1687, he thus wrote to him: "Are you now a minifter of Jefus "Chrift? hath he counted you faithful, putting you "into the miniftry? then be faithful; out of love to "him feed his lambs; as a workman that needs not "to be afhamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. It were very eafy to transcribe many more fuch lines as these, out of his letters to his fon, but these shall fuffice.

We shall next gather up fome few passages out of fome of his letters to a perfon of quality in London, (fuch of them as are come to our hands, which are but few of many) the beginning of his correspondence with that gentleman, (which continued to his death, and was kept up monthly for a great while) was in the year 1686, and the following letter broke the ice :---

Honoured Sir,

" I OPING you are by this time, as you intended, returned to London, to your home and habitation there, I make bold, according to my promile, to falute you in a few lines. In the first place, to be your remembrancer of the vows of God which are upon you, upon the account of the many mercies * cies of your journey, both in your going out, and " in your coming in. Was not every flep you took " hedged about with fpecial providence? Had not " the angels charge over you? Did not they pitch " their tents where you pitched yours? Did not good-" nefs and mercy follow you, and fhould it not then " be had in thankful remembrance? Where mercy " goes before, fhould not duty follow after? If you " have Mr Anger's life, you will find there, page 88, " 80. a collection out of his diary, of ten heads of " mercies, acknowledged in a journey, to heighten " God's praifes, and to quicken his own and others " hearts therein, and they are certainly very affecting. " Next (Sir) I am to accquaint you, that I have faith-" fully difpoled of the money you left with me at part-" ing, to eight poor praying widows in this neighbour-" hood, as you appointed. And this among all the " reft of your alms-deeds is had in memorial before "God; 'tis fruit that will abound to your account, " bread fent a voyage upon the waters, which you " and yours will find again after many days; for he is " faithful that hath promifed. The apoftle's prayer " fhall be mine, 2 Cor. ix. 10. Now he that minister-" eth feed to the fower, doth minister bread for your " food, and multiply your feed fown, and increase the " fruits of your righteoufnels. Amen.

And fome time after he writes, "Your acknowledging God in all your affairs, I cannot but rejoice in, as an evidence of the uprightnefs of your heart towards him; 'tis the life and foul of all religion; 'tis indeed to walk with God: that includes as much as any other feripture command in fo few words, In all thy ways acknowledge him; in every thing thou doft have an eye to him; make his word and will thy rule, his glory thy end; fetch in ftrength from him; expect fuccefs from him; and in all events that happen, which are our ways too (whether they be for us or againft us) he is to be acknowledged, that 16 c

In another letter, "As to the accefion lately made "to your effate, much good may it do you; that is "much good may you do with it, which is the true good of an effate. The lady Warwick would not "thank him, that would give her a thoufand a year, and tye her up from doing good with it. I rejoice "in the large heart which God hath given you with your large effate, without which heart the effate "would be your fnare."

I have lately met with a letter of Mr Henry's, to a couple related to him, who in a very flort time had buried all their children of the fmall-pox, to their great grief, 'twas in the year 1679. What comfort and counfels he administered to them, may be of use to others in their afflictions, and therefore I shall transcribe the whole letter, though it be long.

Dear Coufins,

" THIS is to you both, whom God hath made 66 one in the conjugal relation, and who are one alfo " in the prefent affliction; only to fignify to you, that " we do heartily fympathize with you in it. The tri-" al is indeed tharp, and there will be need of all the " wildom and grace you have, and of all the help of " friends you can get, both to bear and to improve it * aright. You must bear it with "filence and fubmif-" fion. Surely it is meet to be faid unto God, I have " born chastifement." He is sovereign Lord of all, " and may do with us and ours as pleafeth him. It " is not for the clay to quarrel with the potter. It " was mercy you had children, and comfort in them 66 fo to long; it is mercy that yet you have one another, " and your children are not loft, but gone before, a " little before, whither you yourfelves are hafting af-" ter. And if a ftorm be coming, (as God grant it " be not) it is beft with them that put first into the " harbour. Your children rae taken away from the " evil to come, and you must not mourn as they that " have no hope. Senfible you cannot but be, but " dejected and fullen you muft not be; that will but " put more bitterness into the cup, and make way for " another, perhaps a fharper ftroke. You must not " think, and I hope you do not, that there cannot be " a fharper ftroke, for God hath many arrows in his " quiver; he can heat the furnace feven times hotter, " and again and again feven times hotter, till he hath " confumed us; and if he fhould do fo, yet fiill we " must fay, he hath punished us less than our iniquities " have deferved. For examples of patience in the like " kind we have two eminent ones in the book of God, " those are Job and Aaron; of the latter it is faid, " Lev. x. 13. "He held his peace;" and that which " quieted him, was what his brother Mofes faid to " him, " This is that which the Lord hath faid, I will " be fanctified ;" and if God be fanctified, Aaron is " fatisfied; if God have glory from it, Aaron hath " nothing to fay against it. Of the former it is faid, " Job i. 20. he fell down, but it was to worfhip; and " we are told how he expressed himself, The Lord gave, " &c. He acknowledgeth God in all: and indeed, af-" ter all, this is it (my dear coufins) that you muft " fatisfy yourfelves with under this fad providence, " that the Lord hath done it, and the fame will that " ordered the thing itfelf, ordered all the circumftan-" ces of it; and who are we that we should dispute " with our Maker? " Let the potheerds ftrive with " the potfherds of the earth ; but let not the thing for-64 med, fay to him that formed it, Why haft thou " made me thus?" and as for the improvement of this " affliction, (which I hope both of you earneftly de-" fire,

" fire, for it is a great lofs to lofe fuch a providence. " and not be made better by it) I conceive there are " four leffons which it fhould teach you, and they are " good leffons, and fhould be well learned, for the ad-" vantage of them is unfpeakable. 1. It fhould for " ever imbitter fin to you; you know what the faid to " the prophet, 1 Kings xvii. 13. " Art thou come to " call my fins to remembrance, and to flay my fon ?" " 'tis fin, fin that is the old kill-friend, the Jonah that " hath raifed this ftorm, the Achan that hath troubled " your houfe; then how fhould you grow in your hat-" red of it, and endeavours against it? that you may * be the death of that which hath been the death of " your dear children; I fay the death of it, for noth-" ing lefs will fatisfy the true penitent, than the death " of fuch a malefactor. 2. It fhould be a fpur to you " to put you on in heaven's way : it may be you were " growing remifs in duty, beginning to flack your for-" mer pace in religion, and your heavenly Father faw " it, and was grieved at it, and fent this fad providence " to be your monitor, to tell you, you fhould remem-" ber whence you were fallen, and do your first works, " and be more humble and holy, and heavenly and " felf-denying, and watchful, abounding always in the " work of the Lord. O blefied are they that come " out of fuch a furnace thus refined, they will fay " hercafter, 'twas a happy day for them that ever they " were put in. 3. You must learn by it as long as " you live, to keep your affections in due bounds toss wards creature-comforts, How hard is it to love " and not to over-love, to delight in children or yoke-" fellows, and not over-delight: now God is a jealous "God, and will not give his glory to any other; and " our excels this way doth often provoke him to re-" move that mercy from us, which we do thus make " an idol of; and our duty is to labour when he doth " fo, to get that matter amended, and to rejoice in all " our enjoyments with trembling, and as if we rejoi-" ced not. 4. It should be a means of drawing your " hearts

" hearts and thoughts more upwards and homewards; " I mean your everlafting home. You fhould be look-" ing oftner now than before into the other world. I " fhall go to him, faith David, when his little fon was " gone before. It is yet but a little while ere all the " things of time fhall be fwallowed up in eternity; " and the matter is not great, whether we or ours die " first, whilst we are all dying: in the midst of life we " are in death : what manner of perfons then ought " we to be? Now our Lord Jefus Chrift himfelf, and " God, even our Father, be your fupport under, and " do you good by this difpenfation, and give you a " name better than that of fons and daughters. We 45 are daily mindful of you at the throne of grace, in " our poor measure, and dearly recommended to " you," &c.

We shall next gather up forme passages out of his letters to his children, after they were married and gone from him.

To one of his daughters with child of her first child, he thus writes, "You have now one kind of burthen "more than ever you had before to cast upon God, "and if you do fo, he will fustain you, according to "his promife."

And when the time of travail was near, thus; "You " know whom you have trufted, even Him who is " true and faithful, and never yet did, nor ever will " forfake the foul that feeks him. Though he be Al-" mighty, and can do every thing, yet this he cannot " do, he cannot deny himfelf, nor be worfe than his " word; but what is his word? Hath he promifed " that there shall be always a fafe and speedy delive-" ry? that there shall be no Jabez, no Benoni? No, " but if there be, he hath promifed it shall work to-" gether for good: hath promifed, if he doth not " fave from, he will fave through : if he call to go, " even through the valley of the Ihadow of death, (and " what lefs is child-bearing?) he will be with you, " his D d

" his rod and his ftaff fhall comfort you, and that's " well: therefore your faith must be in those things as the promise is, either fo or fo, and which way foever it be, God is good and doth good. Therefore (my dear daughter) lift up the hands that hang down, cast your burthen upon him, trust alfo in him, and let your thoughts be established. We are mindful of you in our daily prayers, but you have a better Intercessor than we, who is heard al-" ways."

To another of them, in the fame circumfrance, he thus writes; "Your laft letter fpeaks you in a good "frame; which rejoiced my heart, that you were fix-"ed, fixed waiting upon God; that your faith was "uppermoft, above your fears; that you could fay, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord, let him do with "me as feemeth good in his cyes. We are never fit-"ter for a mercy, nor is it more likely to be a mercy" indeed, than when it is fo with us; now the Lord "keep it always in the imagination of the thoughts of your heart. And he concludes, forget not a Tim. "ii. haft.

When one of his daughters was fafely delivered, in a letter to another of them that was drawing near to that needful hour, he observed, that when David faid, Ffal. cxvi. 12. What shall I render? he prefently adds, ver. 13. "I will call upon the name of the Lord." " As if (faith he) calling upon the name of the Lord " for mercy for you, were one way of rendering un-" to the Lord, for the great benefit done to your fil-" ter."

On occafion of affliction in their families by the ficknefs or death of children, or otherwile, he always wrote fome word in feafon.

" In the furnace again ? (faich he) but a good friend fits by, and it is only to take away more of the drofs. If lefs fire would do, we fhould not have it fo much and fo often. O for faith to truth the Refiner, and to refer all to his will and wirdom, and to wait

" wait the iffue.---for I have been young, and now " am old, but I never yet faw it in vain to feek God, " and to hope in Him."

At another time he thus writes : "Tough and knot-"ty blocks mult have more and more wedges; our "heavenly Father, when he judgeth, will overcome. "We hear of the death of dear S. T. and chide our-"felves for being fo often pleafed with his little pret-"tyfafhions, left we offended therein, by being too much fo. No rival mult fit with Him in his throne, who deferves all our love and joy, and hath too little of "it."

At another time, upon the death of another little one: "The dear little one (faith he) made but a flort "pafface through this to another world, where it is "to be for ever a living member of the great body, "whereof Jefus Chrift is the ever-living head; but "for which hope there were caufe for forrow indeed. If he that gives takes, and it is but his own, why "fhould we fay, What doft thou?

At another time upon the like occafion; "Our "quiver of childrens children is not fo full, but God "can foon empty it: O for grace, grace at fuch a "time, which will do that that nature cannot. The God of all grace fupply your need and ours, accor-"ding to his riches in glory. The Lord is still train-"ing you up in his good school; and though no affliction for the prefent bejoyous, but grievous, never-"thelefs afterwards it yields well; your work is "in every thing to bring your will to the will of "God."

To one of his daughters concerning her little ones, he thus writes; "They are but bubbles: we have "many warnings to fit loofe; the lefs we rely upon "them in our joys and hopes, the more likely to have them continued to us. Our God is a jealous God, "nor will he fuffer the creature to ufurp his throne in our affections."

Upon the death of a little child but a few days old, D d 2 he he thus writes: "The tidings of the death of your " little one were afflicting to us, but the clay muft " not fay to the potter, What doft thou? If he that " took be the fame that gave, and what he gave and # " took was his own, by our own confent, it becomes " us to fay, Bleffed be the Name of the Lord. I hope " you have been learning to acknowledge God in all " events, and to take all as from his hand, who hath " given us to know, I fay, to know (for Paul faith " fo) that all things do work together, (not only fhall, " but do) for our good, that we may be more and " more partakers of his holinefs. He can make the " two left as comfortable to you as all the three, as " all your five could have been. However, if all the " cifterns were drawn dry while you have your foun-" tain to go to, you are well; you may allo by faith " look forward, and fay, it was a covenant-child, and * through mercy, we shall fee it again in a better " world."

Upon the fickness of a dear child, he thus writes to the parent : " You and we are taught to fay, It is " the Lord; upon his will must we wait, and to it " must we fubmit in every thing ; not upon constraint, " but of choice: not only because he is the potter " and we the clay, and therefore in a way of fove-" reignty he may do what he pleafeth with us and " ours ;---but becaufe he is our Father, and will do " nothing but what thall be for good to us. The " more you can be fatisfied in this, and the more " willing to refign, the more likely to have. Be " ftrong therefore in the grace which is in Chrift " Jefus; it is given for fuch a time of need as this. " I hope your fears and ours will be prevented, and " pray they may; but thanks be to God, we know " the worft of it, and that worft hath no harm in it, " while the better part is ours, which cannot be taken " away from us."

To one of his children in affliction he writes thus; "Tis a time of trial with you, according to the will <sup>64</sup> of your and our heavenly Father. Though you fee " not yet what he means by it, you shall fee. He 66 means you good, and not hurt; he is fhewing you " the vanity of all things under the fun, that your 66 happinefs lies not in them, but in himfelf only: " that they and we are paffing away, withering flow-" ers; that therefore we may learn to die to them, 66 and live above them, placing our hope and happi-≼ ⊊ nels in better things, trufting in Him alone who is the rock of ages, who fails not, neither can fail, nor 66 " will fail those that fly to Him. I pray you, think 66 not a hard thought of him, no not one hard thought, " for he is good, and doth good in all he doth, and " therefore all shall work for good : but then, as you 66 are called according to his purpofe (bleffed be his " name for it) fo you must love him, and love (you " know) thinks no evil, but puts the best construction " upon all that the perfon loved faith or doth, and " fo must you, though now for a feason, if need be, " you are in heavinefs."

At another time: "Your times, and the times of "yours, are in the Lord's good hand, whofe will is "his wildom. 'Tis one thing (as we read and ob-"ferved this morning, out of Ezek. xxii.) to be put "into a furnace and left there as drofs to be confum-"ed; and another thing to be put in as gold or filver "to be melted for ufe, and to have the refiner fet by. "You know whom you have believed, keep your hold of the everlafting covenant : he is faithful that "hath promifed. We pray for you, and we give "thanks for you daily, for the cup is mixed, there-"fore truft in the Lord for ever, and rejoice in the "Lord always; again I fay rejoice."

To one of his fons-in-law that was a little engaged in building, he thus writes: "Be fore to take God " along with you in this, as in all your other affairs; " for except he build the houfe, they labour in vain " that build it. Count upon troublefome occurrences " in it, and keep the fpirit quiet within : and let not " God's

214 The Life of Mr PHILIP HENRY.

" God's time nor dues be entrenched upon, and then " all will be well."

'Twas but a little before he died that he wrote thus to one of his children; "We rejoice in God's good-"nefs to you, that your diffemper hath been a rod "fhaken only, and not laid on. He is good, and "doth good; and fhould we not love him, and reft "in our love to him? He faith, he doth in his to us, and rejoiceth over us with finging, Zeph. iii. 17. "And have not we much more caule? What loveli-"nefs in us? What not in him? I pray let me recom-"mend him to your love : love him, love him with all the powers of your foul, and out of love to him "pleafe him. He is pleafed with honeft endeavours to pleafe him; though, after all, in many things we come#hort, for we are not under the law, but un-"der grace."

To one of his children recovered from fickness he gives this hint: " Remember that a new life must be " a new life indeed: reprieves extraordinary call for " returns extraordinary."

The laft journey he made to London was in August 1690; before he went, he fent this farewell letter to his fon at Chefter : "I am going forth this morning " towards the great city, not knowing but it may be " Mount Nebo to me: therefore I fend you this as " full of bleffings as it can hold, to yourfelf, my daugh-" ter your wife, all the reft of my daughters, their " hufbands, and all the little oncs, together and feve-" rally. If I could command the bleffings, I would ; " but I pray to Him that hath and doth, and I truft " will. The Lord blefs you, and keep you, and lift " up the light of his countenance upon you. As " you have received, and you for your part preached " Chrift Jefus the Lord, fo walk in him : keeping " conscience always void of offence, both towards "God, and towards all men. Love your mother, " and be dutiful to her, and live in love and peace " among

" among yourfelves, and the God of love and peace " that bath been, will be with you. Amen."

To one who defired his direction for the attaining of the gift of prayer, he wrote the following letter of advice:

" If you would be able in words and expressions of your own, without the help of a form, to offer up prayers to God, observe there following rules of direction, in the use whereof, by God's bleffing, you may in time attain thereunto.

" 1. You mull be throughly convinced, that where fuch a gift is, it is of great use to a christian; both very comfortable and very profitable, and therefore very defirable, and worth your ferious endeavours: this must first be, or elfe all that follows will fignify nothing : for it is as the wife man faith, Prov. xviii. r. " Through defire a man having feparated himfelf, " feeketh and intermeddleth with all wifdom;" that is, till we are brought in fome good meafure to defire the end, we shall never in good earnest apply ourfelves to the use of means for the obtaining of it. lt is a gift that fits a perfon to be of ule to others in the duty of prayer, according as there is occafion, either in a family or in christian communion. It is also of great advantage to ourfelves; for how can any form (though ever fo exact) be possibly contrived, fo as to reach all the circumftances of my particular cafe, and yet it is my duty, in every thing to make my requeffs known to God.

"2. As you fhould be perfwaded of the excellent ufe of it, where it is attained, fo alfo you fhould believe, that where it is not, it may be attained, and that withcut any great difficulty. No doubt, but many are difcouraged froin endeavouring after it, by an opinion they have that it is to no purpofe; they think it a thing fo far above their abilities, that they had as good fit ftill and never attempt it: this is of very bad confequence, as in other matters of religion, fo particularly in this, and therefore watch against this fuggestion, and conclude, that though it may be harder to fome than others) yet it is impossible to none: nay, this wisdom is easy to him that understandeth, where means are used in the fear of God.

"3. You must rightly understand and confider who it is with whom you have to do in praver, for your encouragement to come to Him, though in the midst of many infirmities and imperfections. He is your Father, your loving, tender-hearted Father, who knows your trame, and remembers you are but dust; who is not extreme to mark what we do amifs, in manner and expression, where the heart is upright with You may judge a little concerning his love, by him. the difposition that is in you towards your children, when they come to alk things needful of you; and believe him to be infinitely more merciful and compaffionate, than the most merciful and compassionate of fathers and mothers are or can be; efpecially remembering that we have an Advocate with the Father Jefus Chrift the righteous, who is the great High Prieft of our profession, and whom he heareth always.

"4. You must pray that you may pray; beg of God, the Father of lights, from whom every good and perfect gift comes, to beftow this gift upon you. We read, Luke xi. 1. that one of the disciples came to Jefus Chrift upon this errand, " Lord, teach us to " pray," and he had his request granted prefently: go you to Him on the fame errand. You may plead the relation of a child, from that fcripture, Gal. iv. 6. " And becaufe you are fons, God hath fent forth the " Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, " Father :" and the promife also from that fcripture, Zech. xii. 10. " I will pour upon the house of David, " and the inhabitants of Jerufalem, the fpirit of grace, and of fupplication;" which two, relation and a promife, if they be not fufficient to encourage your faith and hope in this address, what is, or can be?

5. It is good, before you address yourfelf to the duty,

ty, to read a portion of holy fcripture, which will be of great ufe to furnifh you both with matter and words for prayer, efpecially David's Pfalms, and Paul's Epiftles. The Holy Spirit hath provided for us a treafury, or florehoufe, of what is fuitable for all occafions, and where both the word and the matter are bis own, and of his own framing, and inditing : if affections be flirring in us accordingly, we have great reafon to believe he will accept of us. In divers places he hath himfelf put words into our mouths for the purpofe, as Hof. xiv. 2. "Take with you words." Matth. vi. 9. " After this manner therefore pray ye," and often elfewhere.

6. There must be fome acquaintance with our own hearts, with our fpiritual state and condition, our wants and ways, or elfe no good will be done in this matter. "Tis fense of need, hunger, thirst, cold, nakedness, that supplies the poor beggar at your door with pertinent expressions and arguments, he needs not the help of any friend or book to furnish him to if we know ourfelves, and feel our condition, and set God before us as our God, able and ready to help us, words will easily follow wherewith to offer up our defires to him, who understands the language even of sights and tears, and groanings which cannot be uttered, Rom. viii. 26.

7. It is of use in stated prayer, ordinarily to observe a method, according to the several parts of prayer, which are these four:

1. Compellation or adoration, which is the giving of due titles to God in our addreffes to him, and therein abfcribing to him the glory due unto his name. With this we are to begin our prayers, both for the working of a holy awe and dread upon our hearts towards him, on the account of his greatnefs and majetty; as alfo for the ftrengthening of our faith and hope in him, upon the account of his goodnefs and mercy.

2. Confession; fin is to be confessed in every prayer: E e original original fin as the root, fpring-head and fountain; and actual fin as the fruit and ftream proceeding from it. Herein you muft not reft in generals, as the moft do, but efpecially when you are in fecret before the Lord, you muft defcend to particulars, opening the whole wound, hiding nothing from him, alfo aggravating the fault from the circumflances of it, judging and condemning yourfelf for it in the fight of God; and for your help herein, you muft acquaint yourfelf with the divine law, the precepts and prohibitions of it, efpecially their extent and fpiritual nature, as the rule, and then bring your own thoughts, words, and actions to it daily, to be tried by it.

3. Petition, for fuch good things as God hath promifed, and you have need of, both concerning this life and that which is to come. As to the latter, you are to pray for mercy to pardon, and grace to help in time of need. As to the former, for bread to eat, and raiment to put on, and a heart to be therewith contented. You are to pray for others alfo, the church of God, the land of your nativity, magiftrates, minifters, relations, and friends, not forgetting the afflictions of the afflicted.

4. Thankfgiving, which fhould have a confiderable fhare in every prayer; for our duty is, in every thing to give thanks for mercies received, public and perfonal, which is the will of God in Chrift Jefus concerning us.

This rule of method is not fo neceffary to be obferved in prayer, as in no cafe to be varied from ; but it is certainly very uleful and expedient, and a great help to young beginners in that duty.

8. My advice is, that you would delay no longer, but forthwith apply yourlelf, in the ftrength of Jefus Chrift, to this fweet and excellent way of praying; and I dare fay, in a fhort time you will find, through the aids and fupplies of divine grace, what is at firit hard and difficult, will by degrees be eafy and delightful. The promife is, that to him that hath, i. e. that hath, hath, and ufeth what he hath, more fhall be given. Though you cannot do what you would, yet fail not to do what you can, wherein the Lord will accept of you, according to his everlafting covenant in Chrift Jefus, for we are not under the law, but under grace.

CHAP. XI.

A floort Account of fome of his Friends, especially bis brethren in the ministry, that died before him.

W/E think ourfelves obliged to add this account out of his own papers, partly as an evidence of the great effeem he had of the gifts and graces of others to whom he delighted to do honour; (an inftance of that humility which he was'in all refpects a great example of;) and partly that we may preferve the remembrance of fome in that country, whofe names ought not to be buried in oblivion. It is part of that honour which we owe to them that fear the Lord: to mention them with refpect when they are dead and gone, that we may contribute fomething to the fulfilling of the promife, that the righteous, and efpecially they who turn many to rightcoufnefs, shall be had in everlafting remembrance. While their glorified fouls fhine as the ftars in the firmament of our Father, it is fit that their embalmed memories should in these lower regions go forth as a lamp that burneth. The Jewish rabbins read Prov. x. 7. as a precept, " Let the " memory of the just be bleffed." We will take them in the order wherein we find them in his diary, according to the time of their death, premifing only this note of his, occasioned by a particular instance; "Such a " day I read the life of old Mr Bruen of Stapleford, " in which I met with fome things that fhame me, " fome things that confirm me, and fome things that " guicken me." Bleffed be God for that cloud of witneffes we are encompassed about with.

Mr John Machin was buried at Newcastle, Sept. 8. 1664, a worthy inftrument in gospel work : laborious, faithful, and fuccessful above his fellows ; taken away in the midft of his days ; the first candle I have heard of put out by God, among the many hundreds put under a bussel by men. [An account of his holy exemplary life was printed many years after, drawn up, I think by Mr Newcome.]

Mr Heath, late minister of Alkmans church in Salop, was buried May 28, 1666. He was of Chrift's College in Cambridge, where he was much valued for his great learning, especially in the Oriental tongues, in which he was one of the greatest masters of his age. He was employed to correct the Syriac and Arabick of the Polyglot bible, which was fent down to him in fheets for that purpole, for which bishop Walton gave him a copy. He read the liturgy till August 24, 1662, and then was filenced, becaufe he could not come up to the imposed terms of conformity. When the fivemile act commenced, March 25, 1666, he removed to Wellington, and there within a few weeks died, and was buried. When he lay upon his death-bed, Mr Lawrence afked him what reflections he had upon his nonconformity; "Truly (faid he) I would not but " have done as I did for a thoufand worlds." He had great confidence, that God would provide for his widow and children, according to promife. (The character Mr Eaxter gives of him is, that he was moderate, fedate, quiet, and religious.)

Much about the fame time Mr York died in Salop, a holy good man, and well approved in the miniftry, who wafted his own candle in giving light to others, even after he was removed out of the candleftick. Lord! is this the meaning of Rev. xi. 12. concerning the witneffes?

Mr Thomes Porter, late minister of Whitchurch, died at Salop in a good old age, June 19, 1667; he was born in Northamptonshire, bred in Cambridge; he was fettled minister of Hannier in Flintshire, long before before the wars, by the means of Sir John Hanmer, the patron, who was a very worthy, pious gentleman, and a great promoter of religion in that parish (but died in the midft of his days.) Here Mr Porter's miniftry was bleffed with wonderful acceptance and fuccefs, both in that and the neighbouring parifhes; and a great harvest of fouls was there gathered in to Christ. After the wars were over (during the heat of which he was forced to withdraw) he procured Mr Steel for Hanmer, and he removed to Whitchurch, where he continued an inftrument of much good, till the king came in, and then he gave way to Dr Bernard, a worthy moderate man. He preached his farewell fermon at Whitchurch, August 28, 1660, on Col. i. 24. and spent the reft of his days in filence and affliction. He was exercifed long with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with ftrong pain. If this be done to the green tree, what fhall be done to the dry? His dying counfel to the Lord's people was, to "flick " to Chrift, and not to let him go, come life come " death."

The worthy Colonel Thomas Hunt died at his houfe in Shrewfbury, April 12, 1669, a true Nathaniel, an Ifraelite indeed, in whom was no guile : one that, like Caleb, followed the Lord fully in difficult trying times; he was a member of the long Parliament for Shrewfbury, and very active for God in his generation, abounding in good works, and his memory is bleffed. I was going to Shrewfbury upon an appointment of his, and by the way met the fad news of his death, which was fudden, but not furprifing, to one that was always ready. He was twice at public ordinances the day before, being Lord's day, worfhipped God with his family in the evening, went to bed well as at othertimes; but about two or three o'clock in the morning wak'd very ill, and before five fell affeep in the Lord. "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceafeth."

Mr George Mainwaring a faithful minister of Jelus Chrift, and my worthy friend, died in a good old age, March March 14. 1669-70, gathered as a flock of corn in nis feafon. He was born in Wrenbury parifh in Chefhire, fupported at the Univerfity by Mr Cotton of Cumbermere, where he had the reputation of a good fcholar; he was brought acquainted with the ways of religion by means of Mr Buckly his uncle, a ftrict puritan. He was first chaplain to Sir Henry Delves, afterwards rector of Baddely, and chaplain to Sir Thomas Mainwaring. After the wars he was removed to Malpas, whence he was ejected upon the King's coming in. His conversation was exemplary, especially for plainnefs and integrity; he was eminent for expounding for plainnefs and integrity; he was at Malpas, he conftantly gave all the milk which his dairy yielded on the Lord's day to the poor.

Mr John Adams of Northwood, was buried at Ellefmere, April 4, 1670, he was a faithful miniller of the gofpel.

Mr Zechariah Thomas, my worthy friend, died of a confumption at Nantwich, November 14, 1670, in the forty-first year of his age. He was bred up for a tradefinan in Suffolk, but always addicted to his book, and was ordained a minister after the King came in, and entertained curate at Tilftock, under Dr. Bernard, but by reafen of his nonconformity could not continue there long. On the Monday before he died, he faid to those about him, that towards Wednesday he should take his leave of them, and did fo. He was buried at Acton, Mr Kirkes, vicar of Acton preached, and gave him a worthy character (and fuch as he deferved) for uprightnefs, humility, moderation, prayer, faithfulnefs in reproving, patience under affliction; and in faying he was an Ifraelite indeed without guide, he faid all. The Lord make me a follower of him, and of all the reft, who through faith and patience inherit the promifes!

Mr Jofhua Richardfon, my truly worthy friend and brother, died at Alkinton in Whitchurch parifh, September 1. 1671: blefled be God for his holy life and happy happy death. He was feveral years minifter of Middle in Shropfhire, and was turned out thence for nonconformity. He was a holy, loving, ferious man. Dr Fowler preached his funeral fermon at Whitchurch, on Dan. xii. 3. highly praifing him (as he deferved) for wifdom, piety, and peaceablenefs.

Mr Samuel Hilder/ham died near Bromicham in April 1674, the only fon of Mr Arthur Hilder/ham of Afhby (whofe works praife him in the gates) fellow of Emanuel college in Cambridge, batchelor of divinity, 1623, fettled rector of Weft-Felton in Shropfhire, in the year 1628, and continued there till filenced by the act of uniformity. He was one of the affembly of divines; a father to the fons of the prophets in and about Shropfhire. He was learned, loving, and charitable, an excellent preacher, an eminent empofitor, and very much a gentleman; he was about fourfcore years of age when he died. He ordered by his will this infcription upon his grave-ftone: Samuel Hilder/ham, B. D. rector of Weft-Felton, in the county of Salop, 34 years, till August 24, 1662.

Mr Richard Sadler, my worthy friend and fellowlabourer, died at Whixal in Prees parifh, April---1675. He was born in Worcefter: went, when young, with his father into New-England; after the wars he returned into England; was ordained at Whixal-chapel, May 16. 1648, and was removed thence to Ludlow. Being turned out there upon the King's coming in, he fpent the reft of his days in privacy at Whixal: a man of great piety and moderation.

Mr Rowland Nevet died at his houfe near Ofweftry December 8. 1675, and was buried at Morton-chapel. I preached his funeral fermon at Swinny, on 2 Pet. i. 14. "Knowing that I muft fhortly put off this my ta-" bernacle :" thence fhewing that the minifters of Chrift muft certainly and fhortly die. He was born in Hodnet parifn, Anno Dom. 1609, brought up at Shrewfbury fchool, was afterwards of Edmund-hall in Oxford, commenced mafter of arts in the year 1634, be he was epifcopally ordained; and Anno 1635, he was prefented to the vicarage of Stanton in Shropshire, where he continued many years, with great fuccels in his ministry. While he was fingle, he kept house, judging that more for the furtherance of his work among his people, than to table. After the war he removed to Ofweftry, where he laboured abundantly in the work of the Lord; and even after he was filenced for nonconformity, he continued among his people there to his dving day, doing what he could, when he might not do what he would. He would fay, he thought most of his converting work was done at Ofwestry, the first feven years of his being there. He loved to preach, and to hear others preach concerning the great things of religion, Redemption, Reconciliation, Regeneration, &c. for these (faid he) are the main matter. When the plague was at Olweftry, he continued with his people, and preached to them, and it was an opportunity of doing much good.

His conversation from his youth was not only blamelefs, but holy and pious; he was exemplary for family religion, and great care and industry in the education of his children. He was looked upon as congregational in judgement and practice, and was not fatisfied to join in the common prayer; but he was free to communicate with those that did. It was his judgement, that minifters fould be ordained by minifters; and that a minister is not only a minister of the particular congregation in which he labours. He greatly bewailed the divisions of the church, and the intemperate heats of fome of all perfuafions. He was exceeding kind and loving to his friends, very frequent in pious ejacu'ations to God. Being often diftempered in body, he would fay, he was never better than in the pulpit, and that it was "the best place he could wish to die " in." He often bleffed God for a fit of ficknefs which he had, which he faid he would not have been without for a world, the foundation of his comfort, and hope of heaven being laid then. When he was fometimes much much spent with his labours, he would appeal to God, that, "Though he might be wearied in his fervice, he " would never be weary of it." His dying prayer for his children (after many fweet exhortations) was, "That the Mediator's bleffing might be the portion of " every one of them :" adding, "I charge you all, fee " to it, that you meet me on the right hand of Chrift, " at the great day." A little before he died he had this expression, "Go forth, my Soul, go forth to meet "thy God;" adding by and by, "It is now done; " come, Lord Jefus, come quickly." One prefent faying to him, that he was now going to receive his reward, he replied, "It is free grace." [Mr Henry was much importuned to print his fermon at Mr Nevet's funeral, with fome account of his life and death, which he was fomewhat inclined to do, but was difcouraged by the difficulties of the times, and it was never done. But fome materials he had for it, out of which we have collected thefe hints.

Mr Robert Fogg, my old dear friend, was buried at Acton near Nantwich, April 21. 1676, he died in a good old age, about eighty. He was minister of Bangor in Flintshire, till after the King came in, and thenceforward to his death was a poor filent nonconformilt, but of a bold and zealous fpirit. Giving good counfel to those about him a little before he died, he had this weighty faying among others, " Aflure yourfelves, the " Spirit of God will be underling to no fin."

Mr Andrew Parfons, fome time minister of Wem, died at London, October 1. 1684. He was born in Devonshire, and was minister there fome years before the war; being driven thence to London, he became well known to Mr Pym, who fent him down to Wem, when that town was garrifoned for the Parliament; there he continued in the exercise of his ministry, till the year 1660. He was an active, friendly, generous man, and a moving, affecting preacher. Mr Baxter, inhis life, part 3. page 94, commends him for a moderate man, and fpeaks of his being in trouble, for fe-Ff ditious ditious words fworn against him, which were these: preaching from 2 Tim. iii 13. he faid, "The devil was " like a king, that courted the foul, and fpoke fair till " he was gotten into the throne, and then played " pranks." The witneffes depofed contrary to the coherence of his difcourfe, that he faid the king was like the devil. He was tried at Shrewfbury before my Lord Newport, Mr Serjeant Turner and others, May 28. 1662. It was also charged upon him, that he had faid, "There was more fins committed now in England " in a month, than was heretofore in feven years;" and " That there had been more and better preaching in " England for twenty years paft, than was ever fince "the apoftles days." He had counfel affigned him, who pleaded that the time limited by the flatute in which he was indicted was expired : the Court yielded it was fo. allowing twenty-eight days to a month; but they would understand it of thirty days to a month, fo he was found guilty, and fined two hundred pounds, and ordered to be imprifoned till it fhould be paid.

Mr Hugh Rogers, a worthy faithful minifer of Jefus Chrift, turned out for nonconformity, from Newtown in Montgomeryfhire, was buried at Welfhpool, March 17, 1679-80, he was looked upon as congregational but his declared judgment was, "That mini-"fters ought to be ordained by minifters, and to give "themfelves wholly to that work; and that none but "minifters have authority to preach and govern in a "conflituted church; and that Chrift's minifters are "his minifters in all places; and that where the word "of Chrift is preached, and his Sacraments adminif-"tered, there is a true church." He was a man of excellent converfe, and whofe peculiar felicity lay in pleafant and edifying difcourfe.

July 2d and 3d, 1680, thefe two days brought tidings of the death of Mr Haines, fome time minister of Wem in Shropfhire, and fince at New-chapel in Weftminster; and of Mr Richard Edwards minister at Ofwestry, both worthy conformists, pious, peaceable and good good men, whom I hope, through grace, to meet flortly in heaven. The Lord raife up others in their room to be and do better.

Mr Robert Bofier, my dear friend and kinfman, having juft compleated the twenty-third year of his age, died of a fever, September 13, 1680, at Mr Doolittle's houfe in Iflington, whither he was gone but a few weeks before for improvement in learning; being formerly a commoner of Edmund-hall in Oxford, and fince having fpent fome years in my family, and defigned himfelf for the fervice of Chrift, in the work of the miniftry. He was a young man of pregnant parts, great induftry, and exemplary ferioufnefs and piety, and likely to be an eminent inftrument of good in his day. His friends and relations had promifed themfelves much comfort in him, but we know who " per-" formeth the thing that is appointed for us, and giv-" eth not account of any of his matters."

Mr John Malden, my dear and worthy friend, turned out from Newport in Shropfhire for nonconformity, died at Alkington near Whitchurch, May 23, 1681, a man of great learning, an excellent Hebrecian, and of exemplary piety, and a folid preacher: as he lived fo he died, very low in his own eyes; efteeming himfelf good for nothing, though really good for every thing, which was manifeftly a prejudice, both to his comfort, and to his ufefulnefs. He faid, he was far from repenting his being a fufferer againft conformity. The relicks of fo much learning, piety, and humility, I have not feen this great while laid in a grave, but bleffed be God we had fuch a one fo long.

Dr Jofhua Maddocks, a beloved Phyfician, our very dear friend and kinfman, died of a fever at Whitchurch, in the midft of his days, July 27th, 1682, a very pious man, and efpecially eminent for meeknefs; an excellent fcholar, and particularly learned in the mathematicks: he lived much defired, and died as much lamented.

Mr Thomas Bridge, who had been rector of the Ff 2 higher higher rectory of Malpas about fifty-feven years, being aged about eighty-two years, was buried at Malpas, Octob. 7, 1682. In his laft ficknefs, which was long, he had appointed Mr Green, one of the curates there, to preach his funeral fermon on 1 Tim i. 16 " How-" beit, for this caufe I obtained mercy, that in me firft, " Jefus Chrift might fhew forth all long-fuffering :" and to fay nothing in his commendation, but to give a large account of his repentance upon his death-bed, &c. He was a taking, popular preacher, preaching often and almost to the laft. When old, he could read the fmalleft print without fpectacles.

Mr William Cook, an aged, painful, faithful minifter of Jetus Chrift in Chefter, finished his course with joy, July 4, 1684, in the midt of the cloudy and dark day. [fee Mr Baxter's character of him in his life, Part 3. page 98.] and an honourable account given of him by Mr Samuel Bold, of Steeple in Derfetshire, in a large preface to his book of Man's great duty. He was eminent for great industry, both in public and private work; great felf-denial, mortification, and contempt of the world, and a firict adherence to his principles in all the turns of the times. He was first minifter at Wroxal in Warwickshire; there he published two treatifes against the Anabaptist. From thence he was, by the advice of the London ministers, removed to Afhby in Leicestershire, whence he was turned out for refufing the engagement, and afterward fettled in Chefter, where he was minister of Michael's church, till he was outed by the act of uniformity. He was an active man for Sir George Booth, when he made that attempt to bring in the King, in 1659, for which he was brought up a prifoner to London, and continued long under confinement in Lambeth-houfe; and had not the times turned had been tried for his life. During the ufurpation, his frequent prayer was, "That "God would pull down all ufurped power, and re-" ftore the banished to their right." After he was filenced by the Bartholomew act, he continued to his death. death in a paftoral relation to a fociety of many worthy eminent Chriftians in Chefter; though during the heat of the five-mile all, he was forced to withdraw to Puddington in Wirral, where (as in Chefter, till King Charles's indulgence) he constantly attended on the public ministry, and he himfelf preached in the inter-He would fay fometimes to his friends, when vals. he was in that retirement, that he thought "What lit-" tle peace and quietness there was in this world, " God's people enjoyed it in their corners." Soon after he was filenced, he was committed to the common goal of Chefter for preaching in his own houfe, by the Mayor, at infligation of the then Bifhop Hall. He was very indefatigable in his ministerial labours, in which he never fought the affiftance of any other minifter ; though while he had liberty he conftantly kept a public fast in his congregation every month, as he did alfo a private fast in his own closet and family every week. He ufually fet apart one afternoon every week, to vifit the families of his congregation, and to catechife their children and fervants, and difcourfe with them perfonally about their fouls; his vifits were flort and edifying (and he managed them as one that was a great hufband of his time) and he feldom or never parted without prayer. He was not free to join in the common-prayer, and bore his testimony against prelacy and the ceremonies with fomething of zeal; but his great piety, integrity, mortification, and charity, recommended him to the refpects even of many that differed from him. If any asked his advice to any thing which might draw fuffering upon them, he would be very tender, and defire them not to depend upon his judgement; but fince it was a matter of fuffering, to be fully perfuaded in their own minds.

He was a great fcholar, and a hard ftudent to the laft, and was far from entangling himfelf in the affairs of this life, not knowing ought he had, fave the bread that he did eat. In worldly matters he was not very converfable, but in difcourfe of the things of God, none none more free and affable, or more ready to do good.

He lived and died a great example of ftrict and clofe walking with God, and a heavenly converfation; and his memory is very precious with many. He died in the feventy-third year of his age. When he lay on his death-bed, an aged friend of his afking him if he had not comfort in reflection upon his labours in the work of God, he prefently replied, "I have nothing " to boaft of." He was buried in Michael's church in Chefter; and though for fome time before he died, fuch was the heat of the perfecution, that be durft not fhew his face in the city, yet many confiderable perfons were very forward to do him honour at his death.

Mr Jonathan Roberts of Llanvair in Denbighshire, my dear and precious friend, and a faithful minifter of Chrift, died at Mr Titus Thomas's houfe in Weft-Felton, and was buried there Sept. 26. 1684. A true Nathaniel, an Ifraelite indeed, for plainnefs and integrity; a filent fufferer for his nonconformity, for which he quitted a good living in Denbighfhire. He was a learned man, a Master of Arts of Oxford; he died with comfort in his nonconformity, and with confidence of a return of mercy in God's due time. The fummer before he died, he had been at Oxford, Cambridge, and London, where he heard and faw that which much confirmed him in his diffent.

Mr Zechariah Cawdrey, Minifter of Bartomley in Chefhire, a learned and godly divine, was buried December 24. 1684. a conformift, and formerly a great fufferer for the king, but in his later times much maligned and reproached by fome people for his moderation towards diffenters, for his book of preparation for martyrdom, and for his zeal in keeping up the monthly lectures at Nantwich and Tarvin. But he is gone to the world of peace, and love, and everlafting praifes.

Mr Titus Thomas, minister of the independent congregation in Salop, was buried at Felton, December 10, 1686. He was a worthy good man, and not fo ftrait-laced as fome others; we were fix nonconformift minifters there at the funeral, and the feventh dead in the midft of us, faying to us, "Therefore be " ve alfo ready."

10,

Mr John Cartwright, my worthy friend and brother, a faithful minister of Jefus Christ, was buried at Audlem in Cheshire, Feb. 17. 1687-8. formerly minister of West-Kerby in Wirral, afterwards chaplain to the pious Lady Wilbraham at Woodbey.

Mr Edward Gregg of Chefter, a worthy gentleman, and my dear friend, died July 9. 1689. of a tever, in the midft of his days. He was one that feared God above many, of a meek and quiet fpirit, and eminently active and ufeful in his generation. The Lord is pulling our earthen props from under us, that we might lean upon, and truft in himfelf alone, and might learn to ceafe from man.

Mr Daniel Benyon of Afh, my dear friend and kinfman, died June 25. 1690. a very ferious, pious gentleman, and an Ifraelite indeed, a true lover, and ready benefactor to all good men, efpecially good minifters. He told me a little before he died, God had made ufe of me (though most unworthy) as an inftrument of his conversion. for which I blefs his holy name. He had a long and lingering fickness, which he bore with great patience.

Mrs Crew of Otkinton in Chefhire, an aged fervant of the Lord, was buried July 8. 1690. She kept her integrity, and abounded in works of piety and charity to the laft, and finished well; to God be praise.

Mrs Hunt of Shrewbury, the relict of Colonel Hunt, another rare pattern of zealous piety, abounding charity, and eminent usefulnefs in her place, finished her course, October 23, 1690, after two days fickness.

The reverend, and learned, and holy Mr Richard Baxter, died at London, December 8. 1691. aged feventy-fix, and one month; as much vilified by fome, and magnified by others, as most men that ever were;

bu

but it is a finall thing to be judged of man's day. He was buried at Chrift-church, London, with great honour.

Mr John Wood, my good friend, died September 19. 1692. at Mitton in Shropfhire, aged about feventy; he was fometime fellow of Magdalen-College in Cambridge, where he was outed for nonconformity; a learned man, but wanted the faculty of communicating; one that feared God, and walked in his integrity to the laft; had no certain dwelling-place on earth, but I truft hath one in heaven. Hic tandem requiefcit.

Mr Richard Steel, my old and dear friend, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jefus Chrift, died at London, November 16. 1692. in the fixty-fourth year of his age. A man that had been greatly useful in his generation, both in the country and at London.

Mr Thomas Gilbert died at Oxford, July 15. 1694. formerly minister of Edgmond in Shropshire, aged eighty-three, a learned good man.

Luke Lloyd, Efq; of the Bryn in Hanmer Pailh, my aged, worthy friend, finished his course with joy, March 31. 1695. being Lord's day. He was in the eighty-feventh year of his age, and had been married almost fixty-nine years to his pious wife (of the fame age) who ftill survives him. He was the glory of our little congregation, the top-branch in all respects of our stand wine, and my friend indeed.

When he made his will, under the fubfcription of his name he wrote, Job xix. 25, 26, 27. On which text of Scripture (I know that my Redeemer liveth, &c.) Mr Henry, at the requeft of fome of his relations, preached a fermon at the licenced houfe near Hanmer, fometime after his funeral; in which fermon, he bore a very honourable testimony to that worthy gentleman, who (as he faith) went to heaven without a blot, held fast his integrity, and was lively and zealous in the Christian profession to the end of his days. He was very exemplary for his love to the ordinances of God,

God, and his delight in attending on them, his living upon Chrift for firength and righteoufnefs, his great humility, and condefcending obliging carriage in all his converse. He was a man of great courage and refolution : and yet in prayer, tender and felf-abafing, to admiration, often melting into tears in the confession of fin; and his charity and moderation were known unto all men.

He lived and died a pattern of piety, and primitive Chriftianity, and ftill brought forth fruit in old age; his vigor, both of body and mind, being wonderfully preferved to the laft; and by the grace of God he finished well, and his fun set under no cloud. Such good men are intended to be to us, as the ftar that led the wife men to Chrift; and as far as they do fo, we are to follow them. " Mark the perfect man, and be-" hold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

Mr Samuel Taylor, an aged minister of Jefus Christ, and my true friend and fellow-labourer, died at Wem, June 26, 1695. He was turned out from Edstattonchapel near Wem, by the act of uniformity; chufing rather to beg his bread than to wrong his confcience. He continued in Wem ever fince, and preached there as his ftrength and liberty would permit. He had his house burnt in the dreadful fire that was there in 1076, and had a child born that very night. He was a man of a very tender spirit, humble and low in his own eyes, of approved integrity, and finished well. (Mr Henry preached his funeral fermon at Wem, on 2 Cor. iv. 7. "We have this treafure in earthen veffels.)

September 21, 1695. I heard of the death of two holy, aged Bartholomew-witheffes, Mr Richard Mayo of London, and Mr Henry Newcome of Manchefter, Pfal. xii. 1.

Mr Edward Lawrence of London, my dear and worthy friend, and a faithful minister and witness of the Lord Jefus, died November--- 1605, about the feventieth year of his age; born at Molton in Shropshire, of of Magdalen-College in Cambridge, turned out from Baschurch in Shropshire by the act of uniformity in 1662, was driven from Whitchurch by the violent protecution of the conventicle Act, in 1670, when he removed to London, and there spent the rest of his days.

He had many children, but great affliction in fome of them, which gave occafion to his book entitled, "Parents Groans over their wicked Children." It is a very high, but juft character, which Mr Vincent hath given of him in his fermon at his funeral; of which let me take leave to add fome few inftances that occur to us, which may be inftructive, befides thofe which we have already mentioned occafionally. At his meals, he would often fpeak of ufing God's creatures as his witneffes that he is good; and we cannot conceive how much good our God doth every moment.

An expression of his great regard to justice, was that common caution he gave his children, Trem-" ble to borrow two pence;" and of his meeknefs and tendernefs this, " Make no man angry nor " fad." He often faid, "I adore the wifdom of God, " that hath not feen meet to truft me with riches." When he faw little children playing in the ftreets, he would often lift up his heart in an ejaculatory prayer to God for them, calling them " the feed of the next " generation." When his riend chofe to ride the back way into town, he pleafantly checked him, telling him, that his heart hath been often refreshed, when he hath looked out at the window and feen a good man go along the itreets. He used to fay, that Cromwell did more real prejudice to religion by his hypocrify, than king Charles the Second did, that never pretended to it. As alfo, that he feared the fins of the land more than the French.

A friend of his in the country, writing to him not long before he died, defired his thoughts concerning the the differences among the London differences, to which he returned this anfwer: "I can fay little concerning "our divifions; which, when fome men's judgments and tempers are healed, will be alfo healed. But when will that be? They that have most holinefs are most peaceable, and have most comfort."
